SCCY FIREARMS' NEW .380 PISTOLS OFFER A LOT OF FEATURES AT AN ECONOMICAL PRICE

By David M. Fortier Cover and lead photo by Mike Anschuetz

To be frank, I was caught by surprise when the lowly .380 ACP suddenly exploded in popularity. Since its rise it has eclipsed previously highly regarded service calibers, such as the .357 SIG and 40 S&W, which had been commonly recommended for concealed carry. Today, many prefer the “short” 9mm for personal protection. Why carry a pistol chambered for .380 ACP instead of a harder hitting cartridge? The primary reason is due to their small size, light weight and how easy they are to both carry and shoot. Over the past 10 years, .380 ACP handguns have been continually reduced in size and weight until they became similar to many .32 ACP models. This new crop of .380 ACP pistols drop easily into a pocket, yet possess improved terminal performance compared to a traditional .25 ACP or .32 ACP “mouse gun.” For good or bad, their very small size and light weight make them appealing to many interested in concealed carry and personal protection.

Two new economical options on the market are from SCCY Firearms of Daytona Beach, Florida.

SCCY's new CPX-3 and CPX-4 go against the flow of ultra-compact .380 ACP pocket pistols. Rather than trying to make a .380 ACP as small as possible, SCCY set out to design a piece with a balance between being small enough to easily conceal yet still large enough to be able to shoot well. The obvious difference between the two models is the CPX-4 features a manual external safety. They ended up with a compact Double-Action Only (DAO) design feeding from a 10-shot dual column magazine. Size-wise it is somewhat reminiscent of a Russian 9x18mm Makarov PM. Unlike the PM though, this is a thoroughly modern design built on a polymer frame with a push-button magazine release and easy to see combat sights.

SCCY's engineering team has been working on this model for some time now. Firearms News was given a first look a couple years back during an Outdoor Sportsman Group Editorial Roundtable in Grinnell, Iowa. Our staff spent some time on the range with a preproduction model and it looked promising. Not long after the event I received a preproduction piece from SCCY for review. This had functioning issues which I reported to SCCY. Now, two years later, I have a production model in hand. Due to its features, and economical price-point, I felt readers would be interested in this new offering in .380 ACP.

I first learned of SCCY Firearms in 2012 when I had the opportunity to meet the company's founder, Joe Roebuck, and test their new 9x19mm Parabellum pistols, the CPX-1 and CPX-2. He went over the basic design of the CPX-2 as he pulled it apart. As he did so he was rather blunt, stating its nothing new or revolutionary just well proven concepts. Instead, he commented what makes his pistol stand out is how it's machined, and how work flows in his factory. It's his manufacturing processes and work flow which allows him to price his firearms so economically. [Cont. to page 12] tone colors are available, as well as bright colors appealing to female shooters, including pink. The frame features finger grooves on the front-strap, thumb grooves on each side and texturing on the sides and backstrap. It's wide enough to sit comfortably in the hand. Frame length is long enough for two of my fingers, with my pinky resting comfortably on the magazine extension.

Packing a 10-round double-column magazine, SCCY Firearms' new CPX-3 is an affordable .380 Auto intended for personal protection and concealed carry.

Sitting inside the frame is an assembly machined from 7075 T-6 aircraft grade bar stock. This heat treated piece features the rails the slide rides on, plus it holds most of the internal parts. A slide machined from 416 stainless steel bar stock is utilized. This is available with either a black hard nitride surface finish, or natural stainless steel. Both the CPX-3 and CPX-4 utilized for testing wore a natural stainless finished slide. The slide features a fairly beefy external extractor and a spring loaded firing pin.

A short 2.96-inch barrel machined from 416 stainless steel bar stock is fitted to the slide. This features seven groove rifling with a 1 turn in 16 inches right hand rifling twist. Operation is traditional Browning short-recoil with a tilting barrel which locks into the slide. Beneath the barrel is a captive recoil spring assembly. This consists of a full-length steel guide rod and a flat wire spring. Low profile three-dot combat sights are fitted with the rear adjustable for windage via a locking screw.

A Double-Action Only (DAO) firing mechanism is standard. Both models utilize an internal hammer with restrike capability. An inertial firing pin is fitted to prevent accidental discharge if the pistol is dropped. The trigger has a relatively long stroke similar in feel to a double-action revolver. SCCY lists the standard pull-weight as nine pounds. This long, heavy DAO trigger is appealing to many who are leery of carrying a striker-fired design. In addition, the CPX-4 features an ambidextrous external manual safety for extra peace of mind. This is well placed and easy to disengage. Other external controls consist of Usually when a product is priced low it's due to inexpensive components utilized in the assembly. It's no secret, cheap parts lead to a cheap price. However, Roebuck stated the economical price of his pistols was possible through the simple elimination of unnecessary manufacturing steps, and by streamlining production. Holding up the barrel and slide he commented, "These are both machined from billets of 416 stainless steel made here in the USA." Basically SCCY pistols have been carefully designed to simplify their manufacture.

SCCY has been working on this new .380 ACP line for some time, so I was interested in having a look at a production model. A modern looking design, the SCCY CPX-3 and CPX-4 are built on a Zytel polymer frame. The frames are available in a wide variety of colors beyond just Model T black. Earth

SCCY's CPX-3's size makes it both very smooth shooting and easy to hit with, at practical self-protection distances.

The CPX-3 is very similar in design and profile to SCCY's slightly larger 9x19mm CPX-2 seen here.

a traditionally placed push button magazine release and a slide release.

Feed is from steel dual-column single-feed magazines. Capacity is 10 rounds, and one magazine comes with a finger extension base-plate installed. Three magazines are included with each pistol. The magazine body has two witness holes on the right side. The first indicates six rounds and the second 10 rounds.

Each pistol arrived in a small black and red card board box. Contained within was the pistol with a child-proof safety lock installed, two keys, two additional 10-round magazine fitted with low profile base-plates, well written and profusely illustrated manual and a warranty card. It was an attractive looking package, so we were off to a good start.

The frames are available in a wide variety of colors beyond just Model T black. Earth tone colors are available, as well as bright colors appealing to female shooters, including pink.

Each SCCY .380 pistol comes in a card board box with a child-proof safety lock installed, two keys, two spare magazines, manual and warranty card.

release operated easily. The trigger pull is quite long and goes on further than most expect. The manual safety on the CPX-4 was initially on the stiff side, but became easier to manipulate with use. Everyone who handled them commented on their trigger pull. It's no big deal if you grew up on a double-action revolver. If you grew up on a Glock though, it may take a few rounds to get used to. The sights also seemed quite sufficient for their intended purpose. So my initial impressions were quite positive.

Size wise they are fairly compact, although a bit wide in the hips. Basically, they are designed to be compact enough to easily conceal, yet still large enough in the hand to enable you to get a good grip on them to shoot well. Dimensionally they are 4.5 inches high (with extended base-plate), 5.7 inches long with a width of 1.1 inches. Weight comes in at 15 ounces, empty.

The CPX-4 is identical to the CPX-3 but has the added feature of an ambidextrous manual safety.

The CPX-4's manual safety provides a bit of peace of mind for those who desire a manual safety while only adding $10 to the price tag.

The controls of the CPX-3 and the CPX-4, seen here, are well laid out and easy to manipulate.

Originally developed by John Moses Browning, the .380 ACP cartridge has seen a huge resurgence in popularity in recent years.

Recoil is very mild and both pistols proved very enjoyable to shoot during a variety of drills.

A natural piece to compare SCCY's CPX-3 and CPX-4 to would be a Glock 42, except I don't have one of those in my collection. So, I compared them to the slightly larger 9x19mm Glock 43. I found them to be a bit shorter in length than the Glock 43, but the SCCY pistols butt is both longer and wider. Handling them I noticed the SCCY pistols are, in my opinion, more comfortable in the hand than the narrower Glock 43. The SCCY's polymer frame is wide enough to fit well in the hand and to absorb felt recoil. The two external controls shared by the CPX-3 and CPX-4, slide stop and magazine release, are both generous in size. Both are easy to reach and activate. The manual safety on the CPX-4 is well-placed. During initial handling I noted the SCCY pistols pointed well. So, for me at least, the grip angle is right on.

While rifling through the boxes the SCCY pistols came in I noticed their warranty cards. These models have a "No Questions Asked" lifetime warranty. Better still, this warranty applies to the pistol, rather than the original owner, and is good for the life of the pistol. If something goes wrong with it, even if you purchased it second hand, SCCY states they will take care of the problem.

Before we get into testing let's pause for a moment to consider the cartridge these two models are chambered for. The .380 Automatic Colt Pistol (ACP) cartridge goes by a few names, including .380 Auto, 9x17mm, 9mm Kurz and 9mm Corto, in different parts of the world. It was introduced in 1908 and the design of John Moses Browning. Intended to be used in blow-back operated firearms, the cartridge fires a .355-inch bullet typically weighing around 95 grains, at a muzzle velocity of about 980 fps.

While today looked upon as a mere pocket pistol cartridge, the .380 ACP was adopted by a number of armies as standard issue prior to World War II. These include Czechoslovakia (Vz.38), Hungary (FEMARU 37M), and Italy (Beretta M1934) plus The Netherlands and Yugoslavia which both fielded Sitting inside the frame is an assembly machined from 7075 T-6 aircraft grade bar stock which features the slide rails. It also holds most of the internal parts.

To show the size of the .380 ACP CPX-3 it's seen here next to the author's 9x19mm Glock 43.

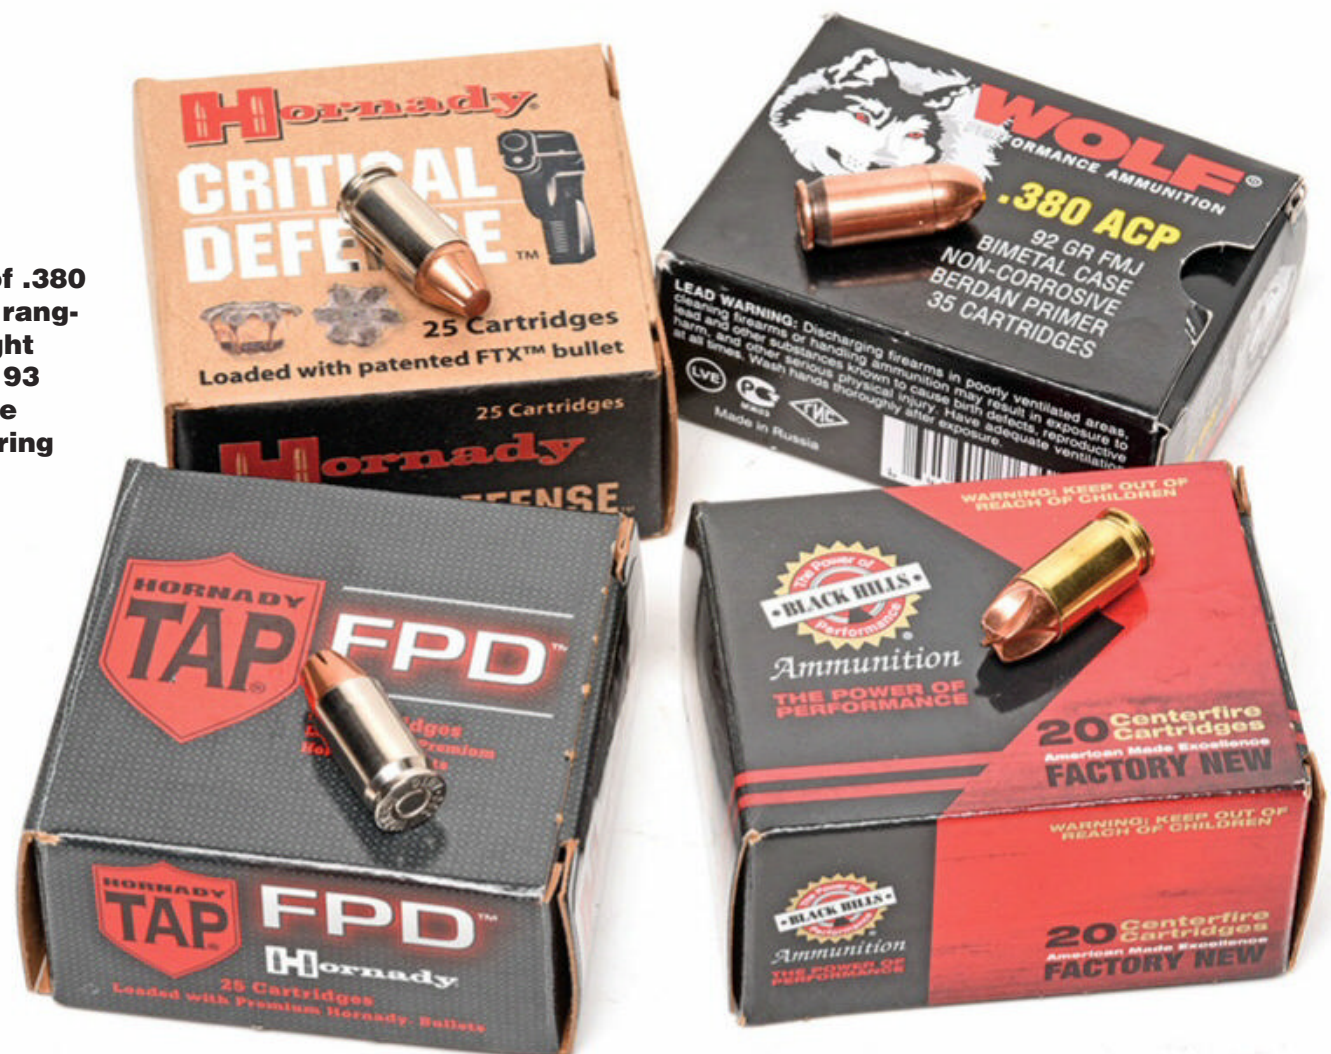

the FN Model 1922. It was also used extensively by Nazi Germany, who captured or purchased hundreds of thousands of pistols in this caliber during World War II. So, like the .32 ACP, in its early years the .380 ACP did see its share of combat. The Soviet 9x18mm Makarov cartridge is close in both size and performance.

The .380 ACP also has the dubious distinction of being the cartridge used to assassinate Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his wife Sophie. Gavrilo Princip (Гаврило Принцип) wielded an FN Model 1910 pistol in .380 ACP on 28 June 1914 when he ignited a fire which led to the "Guns of August" and the Great War. He fired two shots using common FMJ ammunition. One hit the Archduke in the neck and the other his wife Sophie in the abdomen. Both died within the hour.

The recent explosion of interest in .380 ACP pistols has led to many modern loads being introduced by ammunition manufacturers. Ball or rudimentary early generation jacketed hollow points, which may or may not expand, are no longer our only choices. Today there are a host of modern JHP designs to choose from. These offer reliable expansion with moderate penetration when fired into properly calibrated 10% gelatin. Designing an expanding projectile for the .380 ACP is a bit of a balancing act. If you design the projectile to expand to a large diameter, you end up with shallow penetration. So the best loads try to balance the two, providing adequate expansion and penetration. If penetration is more of a concern than expansion, then I suggest traditional Full Metal Jacket loads.

I gathered together five different types of .380 ACP ammunition for testing. Loads consisted of SinterFire's 75-grain RFHP lead free frangible, Wolf Performance Ammunition's economical steel case 93-grain FMJ, Hornady's 90-grain FTX Critical Defense, Hornady's 90-grain XTP FPD TAP and Black Hills Ammunition's 60-grain HoneyBadger copper solid. Of these the Black Hills Ammunition's design is a bit out of the ordinary as it features a solid copper projectile which is not designed to expand.

The projectile's nose of Black Hills' HoneyBadger features a cross with scalloped cuts inside the arms. It is designed to punch deeply, but not expand. Rather, the sharp edges of the nose cut and redirect the tissue radially as it penetrates, so it will not clog going through clothing or light barriers such as drywall. In simpler terms, the edges cut and the curves on the body of the bullet shove the tissue out of the way. Traditional hollow points require velocity to initiate expansion and are handicapped in short barrel guns. In gel tests this bullet penetrated over 10.5 inches while creating a 6.5 inch x 2.5 inch temporary cavity.

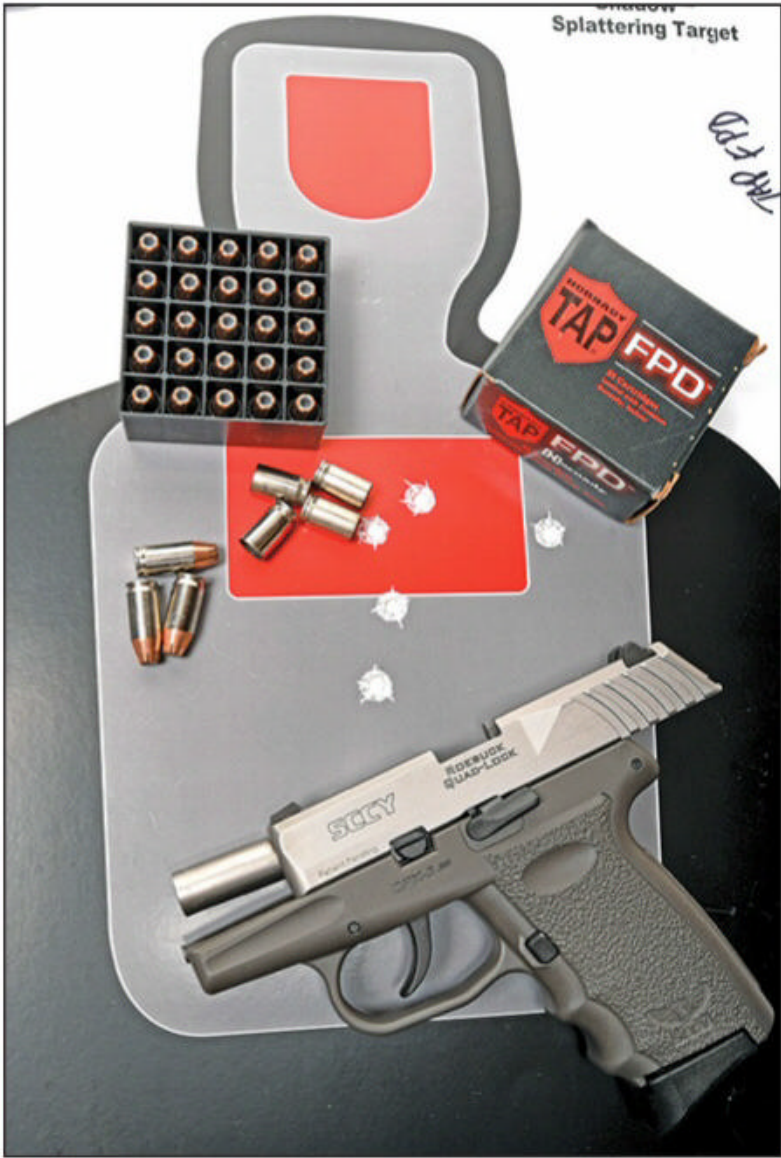

I conducted initial accuracy testing from a rest at 15 yards using the CPX-3. Four five-shot groups were fired with each load. Out of the box the CPX-3 shot considerably to the right. Adjusting the rear sight consists of simply loosening the rear sight's retaining screw and sliding it in the desired direction. With the windage properly zeroed, I got to work shooting groups and measuring velocity.

Best accuracy was obtained using Hornady's 90-grain XTP FPD TAP load which averaged 3.2 inches at 928 fps. SinterFire's 75-grain RFHP load averaged 3.4 inches at 933 fps. Wolf Performance Ammunition's 92-grain FMJ load averaged 3.5 inches at 863 fps. Hornady's 90-grain FTX Critical Defense and Black Hills Ammunition 60-grain Xtreme Defense both averaged 4 inches. The Black Hills' offering was the fastest of the five loads tested. It zipped its solid copper bullet along at an average velocity of 1,149 fps.

The SCCY pistols performed well when run through a variety of drills as seen here.

Accuracy of the CPX-3 at 15 yards was acceptable with best accuracy being obtained using Hornady's 90-grain XTP FPD TAP load.

A look at the Black Hills' 60-grain HoneyBadger's performance when fired into properly calibrated 10% gelatin.

15 Yards – Four Five Shot Groups
Load	Bullet Weight (grains)	Velocity (fps)	Standard Deviation	Group Average (inches)
Black Hills Ammunition Xtreme Defense	60	1149	18.1	4
SinterFire RFHP	75	933	80.6	3.4
Hornady FTX Critical Defense	90	886	17.2	4
Hornady XTP FPD TAP	90	928	19.9	3.2
Wolf Performance Ammunition FMJ	92	863	20.4	3.5

Groups are an average of four five-shot groups fired from a rest at 15 yards. Velocity readings recorded using a LabRadar Doppler radar chronograph at an ambient temperature of 70 degrees F at 1,030 feet above Sea Level.

Recoil proved very mild and the CPX-3 was quite pleasant to shoot. The trigger takes a bit to get used to, but gave no issues. Magazines load easily until the 10th cartridge, which takes a bit of extra effort. The sights are large and easy to pick-up and the pistol indexes quickly. When empty the magazine ejects cleanly and the slide release is easy to manipulate.

Once I finished work at the bench I moved to engaging steel and paper silhouettes from three to 25 yards. I ran a number of drills engaging a variety of steel targets including an Action Target Dueling Tree, eight-inch plates and a hostage target with a full-size silhouette and six-inch plate. At 12 yards I had no problem dumping a 10-round magazine as fast as I could fire into the head/neck of a silhouette. While the .380 lacked the oomph to knock the plates around on the dueling tree, it had no issue hitting them.

The CPX-4 I fired on steel from 15 to 25 yards. It performed similarly to the CPX-3, just with the addition of a manual safety. Both models are very comfortable to fire, the slides are relatively easy to retract, magazines insert and lock into place easily and the bold sights are quick to pick up. Both models proved fun on the range and I enjoyed my time with them. While the preproduction models I examined two years ago exhibited a number of reliability issues, it appears SCCY's engineering team has remedied these.

My thoughts? There is a lot to like about SCCY's CPX-3 and CPX-4 pistols. They are easy to operate, very smooth shooting and acceptably accurate. Their sights are actually usable and they have a generous 10+1 capacity. Recoil is very mild and it's a very fun pistol to shoot. This is a pistol you can hand your petite wife, who's not into firearms, and it will not beat her up. Downside is they are a bit big for a .380 Auto. Like I said, they are a bit wide in the hips. MSRP of the CPX-3 is just $239 while the CPX-4 is $249, making both of them quite affordable. So, if you are looking for an economically priced .380 Auto which is easy to shoot, you may want to consider a SCCY.

The SIG P210 Standard is a pussycat in recoil, being all-steel and shooting 9mm ammo.

CLASSIC IRON, SWISS STYLE

The SIG P210 Standard

By Patrick Sweeney

At the industry functions, we gun writers get invited to, there is usually a lot of ammo to be shot, and many firearms to shoot ammo from. (Yes, it is a dirty job, but someone has to do it.) And inevitably, there are contests. So, there I was on the line, shooting with Phil Strader. Phil is the pro shooter who inhabits the SIG house, and I have known him for something going on two decades now. We've never competed head to head before, because in all that time we were usually in different Divisions in a match. (Lucky me.)

Not this day. We were shooting the new SIG P210 Standard, an all-steel 9mm pistol. Someone walked up as Phil was taking his run.

"What are you shooting?"

"The new SIG P210 Standard."

"Oh cool. At what?"

"You see that steel target down there?" I asked, pointing to the back of the range bay.

"That one, the silhouette that's, what, 100 yards away? That's not too hard to hit."

"Yes, now, do you see the little plates, hanging off of the frame, down near the ground?"

"What plates?"

Just then, Phil connected, sending the plate swinging on its axle.

"That plate? How big is that thing?"

"I'm told it is three inches. My turn."

The contest was simple: five shots in a magazine, most hits on a run wins. Phil and I went back and forth a couple of times, getting one hit per five-shot magazine, until I failed to come up with a hit. Phil made his hit on the next run, winning the contest. What was the prize? Pride of shooting, and bragging rights. No loot this time, only glory. The P210 began life as the Swiss P49, adopted in 1949 as part of the Swiss small arms modernization program. As they transitioned to the new pistol, they retired their fleet of M1900 7.62 Luger pistols, sidearms that had dated from their adoption of self-loading pistols in, you guessed it, 1900. The P49 is an all-steel single stack 9mm pistol with a single-action trigger, with an interesting origin.

The Swiss licensed the use of the basic design from the French, and their 1935 SACM pistol, but the Swiss cleverly dropped all the bad details of that French pistol. Those who might not have an encyclopedic knowledge of firearms will be surprised to find that the French 1935 was adopted by them rather than use the FN High Power which had been offered to them. That's right, they went with a 7.65 caliber, single-stack pistol, when they could have had a hi-cap 9mm. Go French DoD. And that the 1935 fired the unique (and French) 7.65x20 Longue pistol cartridge which is/was basically the US .30 Pedersen case, but loaded for pistols. We're talking a thundering 77 grains of full metal jacketed fury, at a blistering 1,100 fps. And in a final French-only decision, they made two Model 1935 pistols chambered in 7.65x20 Longue, the 1935S and the 1935A, which were externally similar but had no parts commonality between them. No, really, I can't make this stuff up.

The Swiss were not going to put up with any of that. What they wanted was an all-steel 9mm pistol, and they licensed the 1935 for two reasons: they wanted to use the Petter-designed fire control system, and they were Swiss. They were not going to steal it. The Petter fire control system is a self-contained unit. All the essential parts; hammer, sear, mainspring, were contained in a single assembly that could be removed as a unit. We are all now very familiar with the concept, as there is no end of AR-15 trigger system manufacturers who offer packet triggers for your carbine. Well, this was the original, and it was for pistols. The result of Petter's genius is a system where you can have the fire control systems assembled, inspected, tested and inventoried at a higher level than unit or local armorers shop. Plus, if you wanted to build special target pistols, all you really had to do was swap out a combat trigger set for a target trigger set, and viola, a much easier trigger pull. Unit armorers could have duty-level trigger weight assemblies in their toolbox. If a pistol went down due to trigger problems, it was a simple fix to swap out the old for the new, no tuning required. Pistol back in business in a couple of minutes, and trigger assembly packet shipped off to Depot for rebuilding. So, in 1937, they licensed the Petter system and the pistol design. Then war intervenes, and they have more important things to do than change equipment. It takes until 1945 before they can stop guarding the border against possible invasion, as well as testing various prototypes, and settle down to upgrading old gear.

After testing and final adoption, the Swiss, building the P49 in the Neuhausen factory, use it until 1975, when they change to the pistol known as the P220. That one is also a single-stack 9mm, but with an aluminum frame, a traditional double action trigger system, and does not use the Petter fire control design. The P49s are also adopted in small numbers by the Danish military and the German Border Police, the Bundesgrenzschutz. While still in service in Denmark last I heard (but being replaced by the SIG P320, an excellent choice), the P49s in German use have long since been retired. For many years, the P210 was rare here in the States. Then SIG Sauer began importing them from Europe, but while the rarity decreased

The French M1935, which the Swiss licensed to use, but wanting just the trigger assembly packet. The rest of it, they kicked to the curb, especially the 7.65x20 Longue cartridge.

The frame rails go the full length of the frame and its dustcover.

On the slide, the rails are relieved only near the front, where they would not bear on the frame when the action is closed.

The new P210 Standard has fixed sights, but modern improvements on details like the slide stop and thumb safety.

The extractor is a long piece of stout spring steel that will likely never fail to wrest the empty from its hidey-hole.

The sights are three-dot combat sights, fixed and durable.

slightly, the price was always stiff. The low volume and import costs meant that only those who really, really wanted one would be willing to pay the freight. (Sometime literally.) Then, SIG Sauer announced they would be making them here in the US, in their entirety. The first model available was the Target version, and while it was excellent, it was also a target version. Adjustable sights and a set of target grips were not what I was thinking of, back when the P210 was made of unobtainium. Well, the Standard is now here, and those details are taken care of.

OK, let's start from the variances from the expected Browning design. On the P210, the frame rails are on the inside of the frame. The slide rails are on the outside of the slide. You can see the machined remnants of the rails, on the slide, poking out in front of the frame. This means that the slide is guided by the frame rails from the back end of the frame, all the way out to the front end of the dust cover.

This increases potential accuracy. The amount of lateral wobble a slide can experience is a function of the clearance between the slide and frame, and the length of the support surface. Think of it as a triangle. If you keep the short end of a right triangle the same length, the longer you make the other leg and the hypotenuse, the sharper the angle becomes on the pointy end. Think of it this way: if you allow a thousandth of an inch of play between slide and frame, and the rails are three inches long, you have one level of accuracy. (Actually, precision in slide to frame fit, but it ends up being accuracy we measure.) If you lengthen the rails to six inches, the slide can't tilt as much side-to-side, even though you still have that thousandth of an inch of play in the fit. Potential accuracy improves just because the slide has less wobble. SIG uses CNC machining centers to produce the slide and frame out of stainless steel, then gives them a black finish, courtesy of their Nitron process. On top of the slide, in place of the adjustable target sights on the previous USA-made P-210, SIG has installed fixed sights. The modern sights are mounted in transverse dovetails, and the rear sight is much more robust than that of the M49 predecessor. The P210 Standard sights are also of the three-dot design, for them that wants dots. The extractor is a long section of spring steel, inset in the side of the slide, and extending to the rear edge of the ejector port. It is actuated by a coil spring inside the slide, and held in place by means of a roll pin down through the top of the slide. Behind it there are cocking serrations.

SAFETY TIP

Store firearms securely, inaccessible to children and unauthorized users.

No barrel bushing here. The Swiss didn't see the need for the extra parts and machining operations.

The original design had the thumb safety in front of the grip panel. Despite this, Jan Foss won the first IPSC World Shoot with a P210.

The barrel has an integral feed ramp, and this allows for full case support in the chamber.

The P210 thumb safety and slide stop are machined to a different contour than that of the originals.

The grips are wrap-around, and cover the back of the frame.

The slide is a paragon of minimalist engineering, lacking the scallops, slots, edgy cosmetic details and florid logos that are so en-vogue in the polymer pistol arena these days. Good. The five-inch barrel is carbon steel, fitted to the slide without a barrel bushing, and the bottom lug of the barrel also dispenses with the John Moses Browning legacy of a link. Instead, it has a kidney-shaped cam slot, which the slide stop pin passes through. This both unlocks and locks the barrel during cycling, depending on what part of the firing cycle the slide happens to be in at that moment. An interesting addition to the design is the recoil spring guide rod. The bottom lug of the barrel is machined with a slot down the center, parallel to the bore. The rear of the guide rod has a hole through it for the slide stop pin, and the entire assembly is locked together inside the frame once you've assembled the pistol. The barrel has an integral feed ramp, so your 9mm ammo won't have to jump the gap as on a 1911, and the cases will have complete support, just in case you fancy a go with some +P ammo.

The frame is, as described, made with the rails interior, and full length. This does pose a small problem in slide manipulation, as there just isn't as much to grab a-hold of when you need to get the slide worked, but the cocking serrations on the slide are robust enough to make the problem a trivial one. SIG, in US production of the P210, made some changes. The slide contours of the US-made pistol vary slightly from the German-made P210s, but that isn't a big deal. What is a big deal is that they have changed the slide stop and safety shapes, as well as the safety location. On the M49, the slide stop is a large-ish rectangular block, with horizontal ribs running its length. The safety lever is a low-profile lever that rides forward of the front edge of the left-hand grip panel. I'm sure it was deemed more than sufficient for Swiss soldiers, circa 1949, but that design, especially of the thumb safety, is not at all what we'd expect in the 21st century.

So, SIG changed the shape of both those levers, and the location of the safety lever. The two levers are now more sculpted, and the thumb safety is positioned so it rides above the top edge of the left-hand grip panel, a location much more familiar to current shooters. They are not serrated or otherwise given a non-slip surface, but they are shaped such that you are highly unlikely toned checkering or other treatments. The front of the trigger guard is still shaped with a flat face and has a vestigial hook on the bottom, as a place for your off-hand index finger if you shoot that way. The magazine button is right behind the trigger guard, and the eight-round magazines drop free. The magazine well is not beveled, as that is an operation that long post-dates the origins of the M49. The grips wrap around the back of the P210 frame, while the frontstrap is checkered for a non-slip grip. The trigger is pivoted, you can see the pivot pin through the frame, just above the back edge of the trigger guard opening. The trigger pull on the P210 is, well, Swiss. You have a light take-up, with the trigger pivoting (an odd sensation for someone used to the 1911 trigger and its straight-back motion) and then once you've pressed with enough force, the hammer falls. The rest is crisp, and you simply repeat as necessary. I had dry-fired and shot at the range the P210 Standard for a bunch before I hauled out the trigger pull gauge. I was surprised to read it at four pounds. From the dry-firing I would have pegged it at three, but that's what a clean, crisp trigger pull does for you, it fools you into thinking it is lighter than it actually is. The magazines are steel, blued, with a pressed-in groove on the left side to act as a cartridge guide. The finger-hook shaped baseplates come off for cleaning, and there are witness holes along the side so you can tell at a glance how many cartridges are present. SIG has extras in stock, should you want more. They sent me extras, not that I needed them, since I wasn't going to be using the P210 Standard in a match.

The slide moves with a silky smoothness, it locks up with no hesitation, and the entire experience just oozes precision and quality. Felt recoil, in an all-steel 9mm pistol that weighs two and a quarter pounds? Really, you have to ask? The recoil is not exactly inconsequential, but it is utterly manageable, and in that you will be aided by the generous beavertail on the back of the frame. The beavertail, or tang, is longer on the new model than on the original, as there were a few complaints of hammer-strikes on shooters hands. As one who has bled like a stuck pig from other pistols, I have to say I've never experienced hammer bite in a P210, old or new. But if you have, the new contour will minimize or eliminate that.

Loading is simple. Stuff rounds in a magazine. Insert the magazine until it locks in place. Cycle the slide. Push the safety to Safe, and remove the magazine to replace the chambered round. The shoot, aim, press the safety down, press the trigger. Repeat as necessary. The slide will lock open when you've fired the last round. Accuracy? Again, you have to ask? One word sums it up: exemplary.

Taking the P210 apart is pretty much like any other pistol, with a few details you have to be aware of. First, if it is loaded, unload it and remove the magazine. Check again, even if it wasn't loaded before. Then, ease the slide back a quarter-inch or so, and push the slide stop out from right to left. The fit and alignment of the slide stop and its clearances in the slide and frame can be a bit fussy, especially when new. When learning the details of your P210, you will benefit from some patience, and also by nudging the slide back and forth fractionally, until you hit the sweet spot.

Once you get the slide stop out, run the slide forward off of the frame like any other pistol. Turn the slide over and pry the rear end of the guide rod assembly out of the barrel lug. Then lift the barrel out of the slide.

You are finished at this point, unless you want to remove the grips. They require a torx bit, and the screw goes through from the left side grip to the right side one.

An interesting detail that is a historical curiosity. The original M49, and the imports, retained the removable trigger assembly packet. If you have To disassemble you have to hold the slide back a quarter-inch or so. The exact location will vary a bit, it will take some practice to hit the right spot.

Here is the screw holding the trigger packet assembly in the frame. No need to do anything with this at all.

one of those, you strip the M49 down to this point. Then, insert an empty magazine into the frame. Get a thumb or finger on the hammer, press the trigger and ease the hammer down. You can then simply lift the trigger assembly out of the frame. For the US-made pistols, SIG uses a screw on the tang of the frame, a screw that holds the packet in place. On the one hand, I find it a bit disappointing that the original design has been changed. On the other hand, there is nothing you can do to alter, modify, adjust or otherwise screw around with the trigger packet, so it is best left alone. No, I'm not kidding, you can't improve it, so leave it alone.

In testing the P210 Standard, I had no malfunctions of any kind. Actually, I would have been outraged had there been any. The quality of 9mm ammo these days is such that we can hardly blame the ammo. And pistol manufacturers know they will be held to a high bar. SIG most of all, and they delivered. The P210 delivered on accuracy as well. On the matter of sights, the P210 Standard comes with three-dot combat sights. I prefer plain black sights, and were this my P210, I'd blacken them in. In group-shooting the dots aren't a problem, but when I start to get up to speed on plate racks and USPSA targets, the dots get in the way. Here, obviously, they did not. The groups would probably be smaller in the hands of someone with younger or sharper eyes. These days, an inch and a half at 25 yards is just about the limit of my ability to see, hold and squeeze, contests included.

This is where you need to get to, to do basic cleaning. You can remove the grips if you feel the need.

Oh, and the contest with Phil? As I said, it was just for bragging rights. Sometimes these contests get quite involved, and very competitive, because there is loot as well as glory involved. But this one, for some reason, didn't have a lot of volunteers. Perhaps it was because we were shooting it in classic bullseye offhand position. That, and having a three-inch steel plate at 100 yards as the target might have had something to do with it as well. Just in case you were wondering, a three-inch plate, at 100 yards isn't easy. Hitting it one time out of five shots means holding a no larger than six-inch sized group at that distance. (There is arithmetic involved in figuring that out. I leave it as an exercise for the readers who are interested.) That means we were holding every single shot inside the 10 ring of an NRA slow-fire bullseye 50-yard target, at 50 yards. Had I had a moment to do the arithmetic I might not have taken Phil up on the challenge. But I did, and the SIG P210 Standard, using SIG 9mm ammo, was easily up to the task, even if we were barely up to it. But having said yes, I got a chance to shoot the new P210 Standard, and man was it fun. Now that I've had another chance, I've found that the fun has held up.

The SIG P210, aka M49, was also in the vanguard of IPSC shooting. No, really. You see, the second World Shoot, held in 1976 (Salzburg, Austria) was won with a P210, and the third, held in 1977 (Salisbury, Rhodesia) was won with a Browning Hi Power. Yes, that's right, back in the early days of IPSC, the P210, scored Minor, and with the thumb safety in a location we'd find odd today, was the tool that Jan Foss used to beat all other competitors.

What place does the P210 have in the 21st century? It is rather big and heavy for a defensive pistol, and were I packing a 9mm all day long I think I'd want something that held more than 8+1 rounds. The Swiss did experiment with a double-stack variant of the M49 back when they were still deciding on just what they wanted. Now that would have been interesting.

And a hi-cap M49 might well have kept the 9mm competitive for IPSC. A durable, accurate, 16+1 9mm, to duke it out with the 1911, in the mid-1970s would have been quite the tool. Sigh, but not to be.

As a competition gun, the P210 Standard suffers from the same problem as it did in 1975: it lacks capacity to be competitive in the Limited Division. It isn't a striker-fired pistol, so it wouldn't pass muster in Production. It is a single-stack pistol, but the USPSA Single Stack Division specifically requires 1911 pistols, no other need apply. You could shoot it in Limited 10, but you'd have to declare Minor and take the scoring hit. And you'd have 8-round magazines to everyone else's 10. Of course, given the accuracy Phil and I experienced, and what my own group-shooting produced later, the P210 Standard would make a cracking good "Any Centerfire" pistol for Bullseye. And if you can find a place to shoot PPC (a great wintertime league match to enroll in, to learn precision shooting) you will be the envy of those shooting in the Duty Pistol category.

No, you don't buy a P210 Standard for daily carry, you buy a P210 Standard because you appreciate fine design and craftsmanship. Because you want a superbly accurate pistol. And because you desire steel more than polymer. The most surprising thing about the P210 Standard, besides the audacity of offering an all-steel 9mm single stack, is the price. I was fully prepared to see a list price a full grand higher. At the list price of just over thirteen Benjamins, the P210 Standard is a steal. I mean, there are vanilla-plain 1911s you can't buy for that. Sure, it is twice the cost of what a polymer-framed, striker-fired 9mm is going to cost you, but the combat Tupperware is not going to have soul, character, style or panache.

If you haven't ever shot a pistol that was more accurate than you are, or more accurate than anyone you know, now's your chance. All I'm asking for now from SIG is a set of grips just like the originals, the P49 wood grips with the horizontal grooves, and the lanyard loop staple on the left side of the frame. FN

COLLECTING BATTLE-DAMAGED FIREARMS

The stories behind the guns are as fascinating as the guns themselves

By Will Dabbs, MD

Priate Masao Takeda rolled himself into a ball in the corner of his dark cave and felt the earth move to the incessant deafening impact of American naval gunfire. He had served with the 14th Division of the Imperial Japanese Army for thirteen months, one of which had been spent in this wretched hellhole. He had seen his commander Colonel Kunio Nakagawa twice during the brutal weeks of preparation before the Americans had arrived.

Nakagawa was a talented strategist fully committed to the Imperial cause. Nakagawa was likely dead by now along with most of the other Japanese defenders of this god-forsaken rock. Takeda had endured the naval gunfire and air strikes for three full days, and he now began to question his sanity.

The island comprised a mere six square miles of real estate, but the U.S. Navy had made it the focus of seven cruisers, five battleships, and nineteen aircraft carriers. However, Nakagawa had done his planning well so relatively few Japanese soldiers were lost to this otherworldly bombardment. They had, like Takeda, been squirreled away deep in the honeycombed caves that perfused the mountains. It was cutting these caves that had occupied the 14th Division in the torrid weeks leading up to the invasion. What made it different now, however, was that this bombardment would be followed by men.

Marines on the ground meant tanks, flamethrowers, and a limitless supply of hand grenades. He could hear the chaos as each sequential hard-point fell to the American Leathernecks. Now they were close, and Takeda knew it was time.

He choked on the dust that had risen from the shelling, coughing in the darkness. Straightening his glasses, he could just make out the pile of lifeless flesh near the cave opening that had recently been his squad mates. They had not been quite quick enough moving into the rear of the cave when the first shell screeched in. Takeda was alone.

The shelling stopped, and Masao Takeda pulled himself to his feet. He filled the pockets of his blouse with hand grenades and cracked the action of his Type 99 Arisaka bolt action service rifle to ensure he had a round chambered. Creeping carefully past what remained of his friends he squinted into the brilliant sunlight. Perhaps fifty meters away he could see the dull green figures of American Marines moving carefully toward him. Resting his rifle across the broken wheel of the disabled 47mm field gun that had recently been his mission to operate, Takeda slipped off the safety and drew a careful bead on the lead Marine.

The recoil from the heavy rifle knocked him back slightly, and he saw a puff of dust on the man's jacket. Opening the action quickly he was surprised to see the

The War in the Pacific was a brutal pitiless thing fought in some of the most inhospitable places on earth. Islands frequently had to be wrested from the Japanese by the yard.

The Imperial Japanese Army ravaged China, the Philippines, and most of the Western Pacific before Allied forces shoved them all the way back to their home islands.

muzzle of a Browning Automatic Rifle penetrate the mouth of the cave unexpectedly. He had time to raise his rifle involuntarily and scream before the big gun chewed him to pieces.

Lance Corporal Herman Parsons from Salinas, Kansas, dropped the empty magazine from his BAR and replaced it with a fresh box. The late afternoon sun illuminated most of the cave. He could see no further movement. The “Jap” he had killed had flung his rifle forward reflexively as he died, and the weapon rested, bolt open, at an awkward angle at the cave’s mouth.

Parsons’ Platoon Sergeant was calling for a hasty defensive perimeter to bed down for the night. Parsons hefted the Japanese weapon, still warm, by its muzzle. Holding it up to the light he saw the bolt left open and two places where his rounds had creased the gun before they killed its previous owner. Parsons grinned. If he survived the next twenty-four hours the shot-up Jap rifle would make a great souvenir.

History

The amphibious invasion of Peleliu was supposed to take four days. Fully securing the island ultimately required two months of vicious close combat. The operation claimed the lives of 2,336 Americans and left another 8,450 seriously wounded. Of the 11,000 Japanese defenders on the island only 305 survived. The island’s small airstrip never played a particularly strategic role in the ultimate campaign that defeated the Japanese Empire, so the invasion of Peleliu was not covered extensively by the media. There were only four reporters present for the entire operation. The Battle for Peleliu has been described as the “Bitterest Battle of the War” for the US Marines who were there.

Japanese soldiers were expected to die for their emperor in combat. Hundreds of thousands of them followed this sordid path.

The Japanese defending the island had learned a great deal from previous defeats at places like Guadalcanal, Tarawa, and Guam. Instead of attempting to hold the landing beaches they allowed US forces to come ashore and then engaged them from carefully prepared defensive positions inland that were sited in depth. They had filled the rocky hills with tunnels and made good use of natural terrain. The result was a bloodbath for both sides.

The Japanese 14th Division had been drawn from occupation duty in Manchukuo, China, mere weeks earlier to face the American onslaught on Peleliu. Their weapons were typical of those used by IJA Infantry units in 1944. The primary Infantry rifle used during this period was the Arisaka Type 99.

An Underappreciated Combat Tool

The Arisaka Type 99 was also known as the Type 99 Short Rifle in IJA parlance. An evolutionary development of the previous Type 38, the Type 99 was thoroughly redesigned to accept a more powerful cartridge. Where the Type 38 fired a modest 6.5x50mm

Early Type 99 rifles included a delightfully complicated anti-aircraft sight that was supposed to aid in determining lead on a moving aircraft.

Before the war turned against the Japanese they invested remarkable resources in producing their weapons. The complex knurling on the safety knob of this Type 99 is a good example.

This shot-up Type 99 rifle caught two .30-caliber rounds directed from the top. The resulting damage tells a story.

One round passed perfectly between the stock and the receiver.

round, the Type 99 fed larger 7.7x58mm cartridges. During postwar evaluations by the NRA, the Type 99 Arisaka was found to be the strongest bolt-action rifle design of any used during the war.

Early Type 99 rifles included such niceties as a sliding sheet steel action cover, a folding wire monopod, and fascinating folding anti-aircraft sights. As the war progressed and the effects of focused allied bombing took their toll on domestic production such stuff was incrementally deleted. Last Ditch guns produced at the end of the war were absolutely Spartan, sporting a fixed rear sight, unfinished steel, crude manufacture, and a wooden buttplate held on with nails.

The Japanese produced the Type 99 from 1939 until 1945 at nine different arsenals, two of which were outside Japan. More than 3.5 million copies rolled off the lines before Japanese industry was pummeled into oblivion. The Type 99 fed from a five-round internal fixed magazine and was loaded from the top via stripper clips.

Stories Forgotten and Tales Lost

I actually paid a premium to acquire this shot-up old Type 99. The rifle came without a bolt from a gentleman who had taken the gun in trade. The original story of its combat usage and capture have been lamentably lost to history. The spot of fiction that introduced this piece was simply my best effort at recreating something plausible to fit the details.

This rifle caught two .30-caliber rounds directed downward from the top. One round passed perfectly between the receiver and the sidewall of the stock, taking a substantial chunk of the stock with it. This bullet would have undoubtedly torn away the extractor had the bolt been closed at the time. I presume this was the reason the bolt on this specimen was missing. The second round creased the outside of the stock, leaving a deep burned furrow along its track.

The rifle is in otherwise fine shape and would likely be fireable had I a death wish. The cleaning rod and sheet steel action cover are both missing, but the complicated anti-aircraft sight is intact. The steel action covers rattled in practical use and were frequently discarded as a result. I have gathered several Arisaka rifles for my personal collection over the years and have only found one that still sported the original action cover and cleaning rod. Interestingly, that

The geometry of the bullet track would have taken it through the rifle's extractor. The lack of associated damage leads me to believe it was hit with the bolt open. When I bought the gun it did not have a bolt.

If these two rounds came from an M1 rifle that intimates some exceptionally fine marksmanship. They more than likely came from an automatic weapon like a BAR or M1919 machinegun.

The Imperial chrysanthemum is unmolested on this battle-damaged Type 99 bringback rifle.

This is what the same spot on an otherwise unmolested Type 99 looks like.

Niceties like this utterly worthless folding monopod were ultimately deleted as the war progressed.

We used to repair things more than we do today. The stocks on this Beretta 38A submachine gun and this DCM M1 have both been repaired by ripping the wood crosswise and then gluing shims in place. Sanding the shims smooth leaves a strong repair that does not interfere with use.

specimen was a Type 38 captured by a GI in combat in Korea in the 1950's.

The trigger mechanism and magazine on this damaged Type 99 still work just fine. Additionally, there does not appear to be any damage to the bolt raceway. This leads me to believe that the rifle might have been struck with the bolt in the open position.

The geometry of the damage is quite thought provoking. Both rounds followed the same vector and are a mere half-inch apart. This intimates either some exceptionally fine marksmanship or, more likely, a burst from an automatic weapon like a Browning Automatic Rifle or a 1919 machinegun. The fact that the rifle was struck from the top likely just speaks to the chaotic nature of combat. As one might expect given the provenance of the gun, the Imperial chrysanthemum is otherwise unmolested and the markings are crisp.

Musings

I am drawn to guns because they are such elegant little machines. I collect military weapons because they are tangible connections to some extraordinary times. To possess such a relic as this is a privilege.

Reading about military history is one thing, but to hold the weapons used during these sordid periods drives home the reality of what those old guys went through better than might any book. Some young Japanese soldier likely died clutching this battle-damaged Type 99 Arisaka rifle. An American soldier of roughly the same age likely brought it home as a souvenir of what was ultimately the most exciting time in his life. Combat veterans with whom I have spoken invariably admit that, despite the horrors of war, such experiences defined their lives going forward.

The American Deep South is littered with abandoned German POW camps. There are, by contrast, precious few that housed Japanese soldiers. Japanese soldiers were expected to die honorably for their emperor, and American soldiers strived mightily to help them out in that regard. Ultimately Colonel Nakagawa, the architect of the Japanese defense of Peleliu, committed ritual suicide, while most of his troops fell to American guns, bombs, and napalm.

The hardships I endured as a soldier pale in comparison to what our young studs went through in places like Bastogne, Monte Cassino, Fallujah, Helmand Province, and Peleliu. However, the friendships I cultivated while in uniform set the standard for all others. The brotherhood of warriors is a holy thing that is difficult to describe to those who have not had the privilege of experiencing it. In this beat-up old Type 99 rifle we see all the horror, pathos, victory, pain, and defeat intrinsic to modern war. In its own mute way this old rifle tells its own remarkable story.

We took very few Japanese POWs during the brutal fighting that characterized the War in the Pacific. Out of 11,000 Japanese defenders on the island of Peleliu only 305 survived.

Life, Fate, and Chance

Millions of high velocity bullets and fragments scythe across the battlefield during the course of modern combat operations. Each weapon is designed to rip the life out of enemy combatants as quickly and efficiently as possible. In their ultimate effects we can divine some of the most remarkable pathos.

A friend was a decorated Infantry officer during the Korean War. One evening his unit was pulled out of the line and sent to the rear to receive brand new flak jackets. These armored vests were bulky and heavy but radical additions to the US grunt’s loadout. They spent the evening in the rear taking advantage of some hot chow and a little unmolested sleep before rucking up the following morning and heading back to the front.

Early that morning my buddy caught a .303 round to the chest from a Chinese sniper armed with a British No. 4 sniper rifle. The round struck him in the 1911A1 pistol he carried in a shoulder holster before deflecting straight for his heart. His spanking new flak jacket stopped the round and saved his life. His troops ultimately killed the sniper and identified the rifle.

A local buddy recently showed me a high-mileage bayonet a friend had given him. The knife is tired throughout showing the stigmata of obvious hard use. A detailed inspection shows that it is a standard M4 bayonet for an M1 Carbine. All my buddy knows is that it was brought back from combat in Europe during World War 2.

The hilt of the bayonet sports a German 9mm bullet wedged between the leather disks that make up the handle. The German round punched through the steel of the knife and stayed there. If it didn’t save the life of its previous owner it did at the very least save him from much more grievous injury. It is in little things like these that we can come to appreciate the profound power of random. FN

THE FN-FAL

RIFLE

Fusil Automatique Léger
de la Fabrique Nationale

PART I

By Paul Scarlata

The last decades of the 20th century saw years of unending conflict around the globe. Except for the American involvement in Vietnam, many were guerilla wars between national liberation movements and their former colonial rulers, civil/political/ethnic conflicts and fighting between newly independent states.

On the nightly news, one saw scenes of conflict, violence, and bloodshed in such diverse regions as the Congo, Northern Ireland, Southeast Asia, Egypt, Biafra, Israel, Nicaragua, India, Lebanon, Rhodesia and Argentina. But if, like me, you were interested in the weapons being used by the various participants you soon realized that one rifle seemed to show up in every trouble spot in the world: the FN-FAL.

The FN Fusil Automatique Léger (Light Automatic Rifle) was a product of the famous armaments firm of Fabrique Nationale d'Armes de Guerre of Herstal, Belgium. Established in the early 1890s to produce Mauser rifles for the Belgian army, it soon began selling arms to other countries although these efforts were hindered by the fact the German arms making giant Deutsches Waffen und Munitionsfabriken (DWM) was a major stockholder. DWM — who also owned Mauser Waffenfabrik and its patents — restricted those regions where the Belgians could sell arms to and the numbers they could sell.

After the war, with the meddlesome German owners out of the way and German arms exports forbidden by the victorious allies, FN quickly rose to dominate the international arms market with a line of 98-type Mauser rifles and pistols and machine guns invented by its most famous employee John Moses Browning. After his untimely death in 1926, FN promoted Browning's chief assistant Dieudonné Saive (1888–1970), to take over the R&D department.

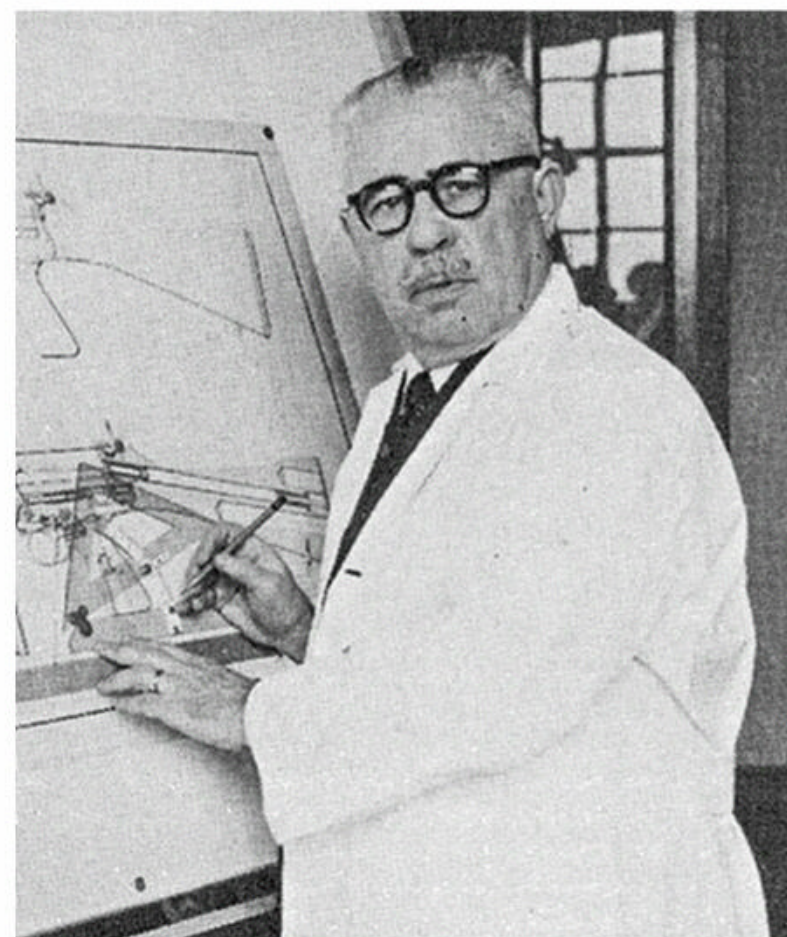

Saive had joined FN in 1906 as a toolmaker. When Belgium was invaded in 1914, he fled to England and found employment with the firm of Vickers-Armstrong. He returned to Belgium after the war and was employed again by FN.

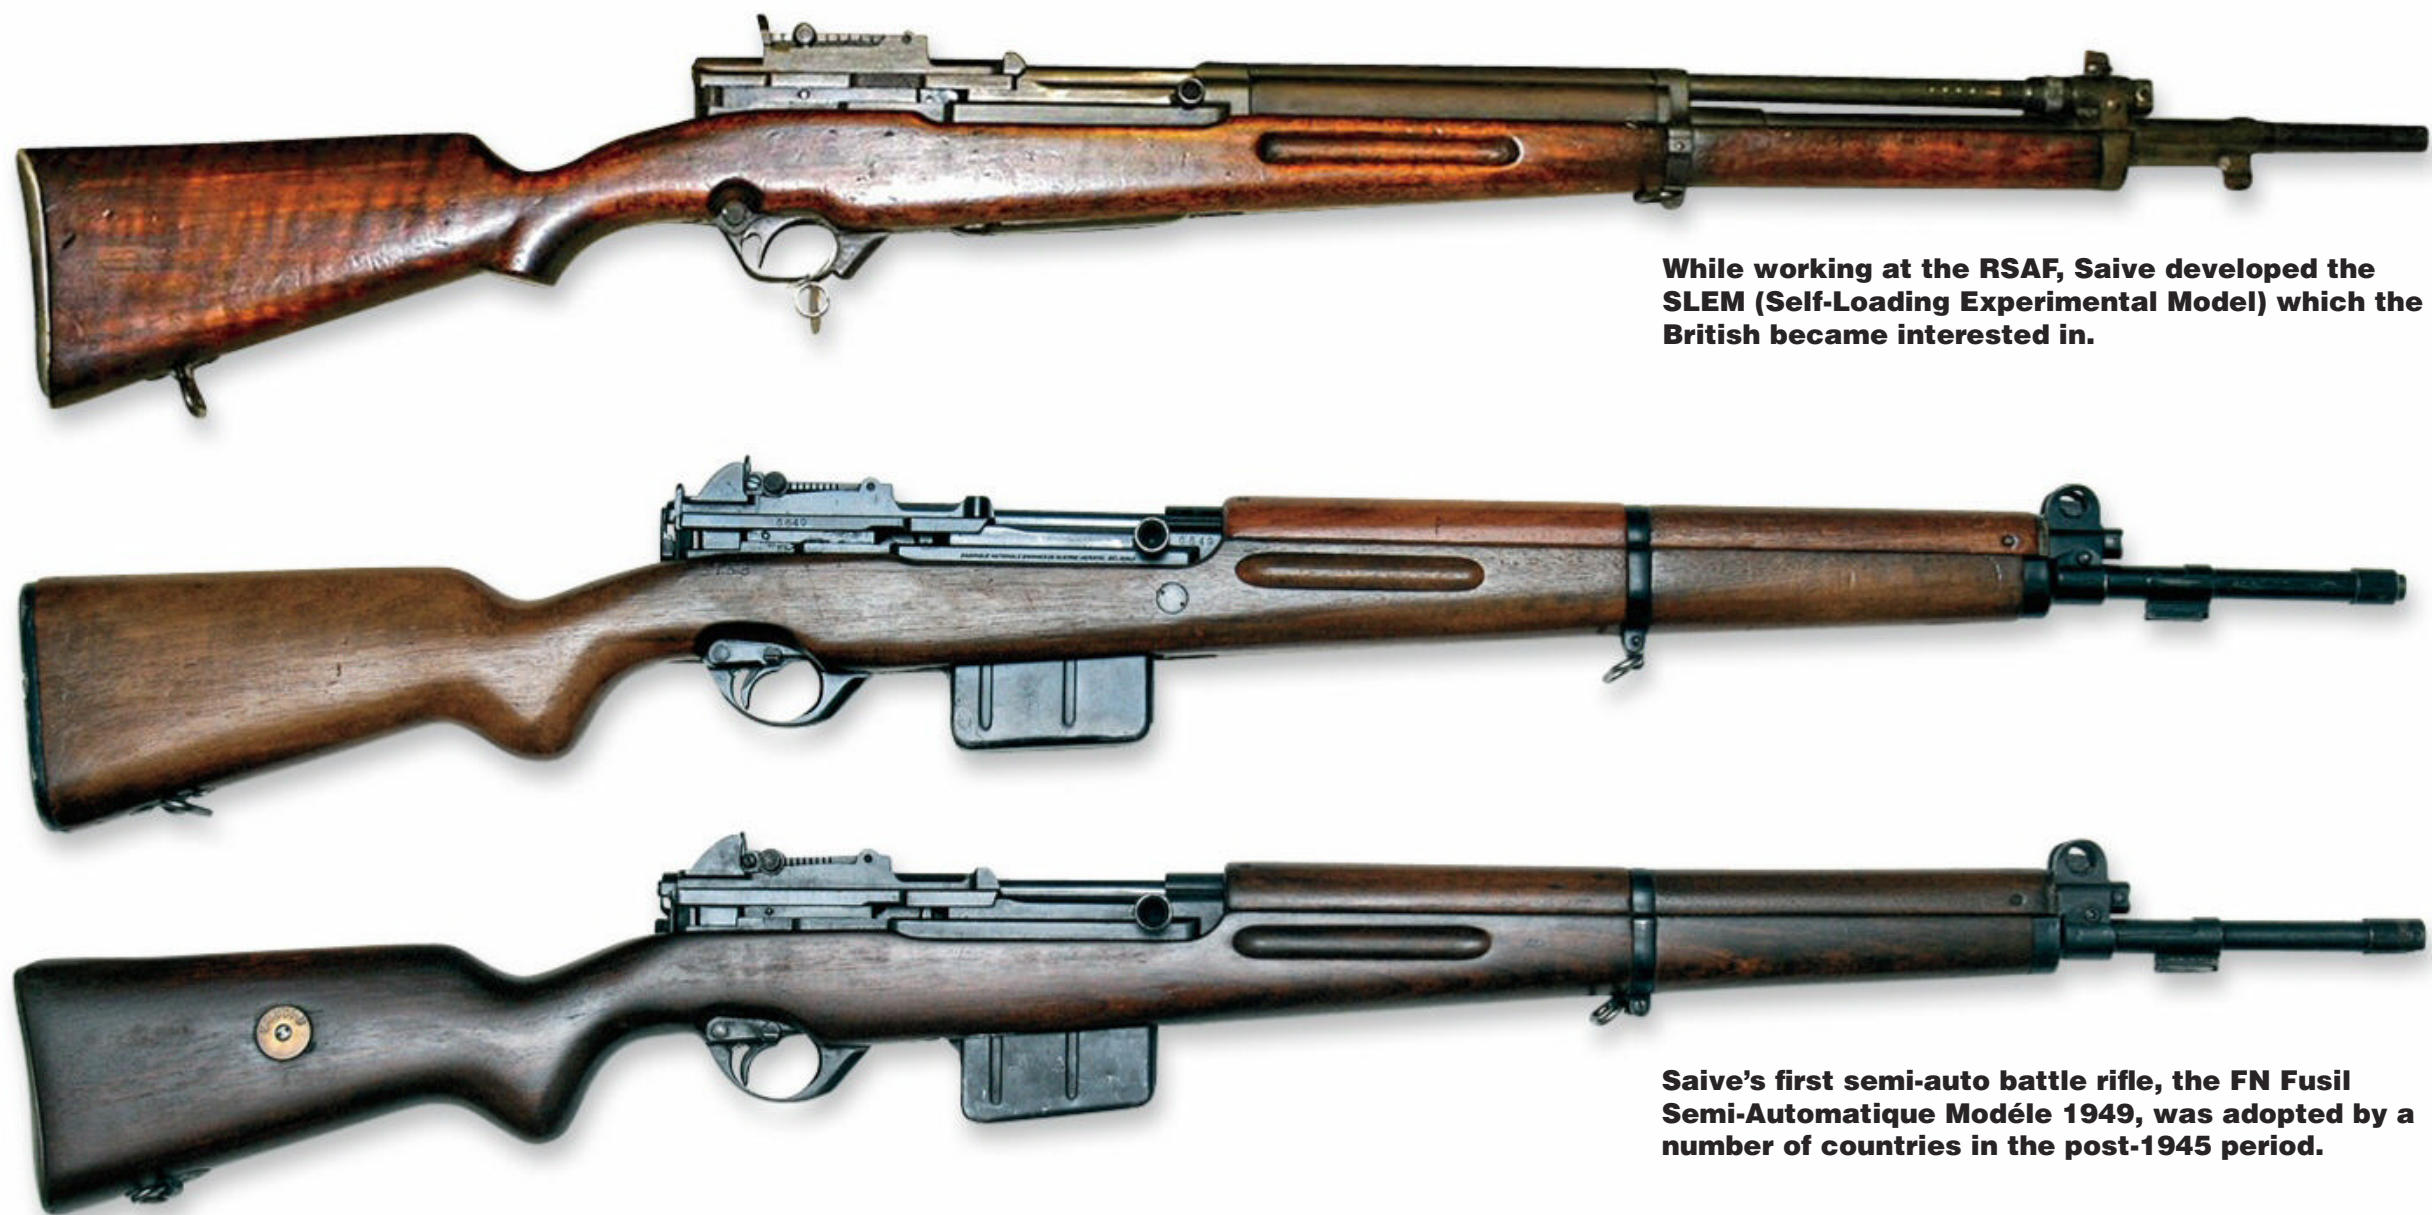

The front gate of Fabrique Nationale d'Armes de Guerre.

In the 1930s, the Belgian army expressed an interest in adopting a semi-auto rifle and, naturally, FN was asked to submit samples. Saive was assigned leader of the design team and in 1937 submitted a prototype known, appropriately enough, as the Fusil Semi-Automatique FN Modèle 1937. It was a gas operated design that utilized a tilting bolt operating system which, according to information published by French arms authority Jean Huon, was similar to one originally developed in France with the MAS Fusil Modèle 1928.¹ A variation was also used in the Soviet SVT 40 Tokarev rifle.

Upon firing, a small amount of expanding powder gas is ported through a small hole near the front of the barrel under the front sight to the gas cylinder and pushes a piston rod rearward. The piston rod strikes the bolt carrier and drives it back into the receiver, where the bolt carrier in turn pulls the bolt upward and back, unlocking it from the receiver, moving it rearward to extract and eject the fired case and cock the hammer. The recoil spring then drives the bolt back forward again, stripping the next round out of the magazine and chambering it.

Dieudonné Saive was John Moses Browning's chief assistant and became FN's chief designer.

While working at the RSAF, Saive developed the SLEM (Self-Loading Experimental Model) which the British became interested in.

Saive's first semi-auto battle rifle, the FN Fusil Semi-Automatique Modèle 1949, was adopted by a number of countries in the post-1945 period.

The bolt is locked into place in the receiver by the forward and downward pushing motion of the bolt carrier upon it.

When Belgium was overrun by the Wehrmacht in 1940, the Germans kept FN operating but a number of FN employees, including M. Saive managed to sneak out of the country with the plans for the semi-automatic rifle. After a roundabout journey, Belgians arrived in England and offered their services to the British government.

Saive was assigned to the Royal Small Arms Factory (RSAF) at Enfield where he was allowed to continue development of his semi-auto rifle. In 1943 a prototype known as the SLEM (Self Loading Experimental Model) was offered to the British army who ordered 2,000 rifles for trials purposes.

After the Allied liberation of Belgium, Saive returned to FN, where it was planned to build the 2,000 rifles for the English. But various problems arose which repeatedly delayed production leading to the British cancelling the order. By 1949, the bugs had been worked out and Saive's rifle was introduced as the Fusil SemiAutomatique Fabrique Nationale or, as it was often referred to in company correspondence, SAFN.

The gas system could be adjusted by means of a rotating sleeve under the handguard, which regulated the amount of gas that flowed into the piston tube to insure reliable operation with different ammunition, a fouled rifle or extreme cold. For launching rifle grenades, a plug on the front of the gas tube could be rotated to shut off the flow of gas to the operating system.

The SAFN rifle was constructed of all forged, machined steel parts, walnut stock and hand guards and the ten-round box magazine located below the action and was loaded with five round chargers (stripper clips).

The SAFN rifle proved moderately successful being adopted by Belgium, Luxembourg, Argentina, Belgian Congo, Brazil, Columbia, Indonesia and Egypt. But its high price and its lack of certain features then coming into vogue (high capacity detachable magazines, folding stocks, lighter weight, bipods, etc.) led to FN having Saive and Ernest Vervier develop a more modern battle rifle. The result of their efforts as the Fusil Automatique Léger de la Fabrique Nationale, or as it became known worldwide the FN-FAL or simply FAL.

The FAL used a gas operated, tilting bolt system very similar to that of the SAFN (see above). A gas regulator behind the front sight base allows adjustment of the gas system in response to environmental conditions and piston system can be bypassed completely, using the gas plug, to allow for the firing of rifle grenades and manual operation.

A cocking handle was located on the left side of the receiver and sights consisted of a post front protected by “ears” and an aperture rear that is adjustable from 200 to 600 meters by sliding it up or down on a ramp and can be folded down to protect it from damage when not in use. Weighing in at close to ten pounds unloaded, the FAL was a handful and many of them featured a folding carrying handle located at the point of balance above the ejection port to make it easy for the already overburdened “ground pounder” to hump it around the boonies/veldt/bush/jungle/desert.

The rifle was offered in fixed and folding stock (Para) configurations and the heavy barreled FN-Fusil Automatique Lourd (FALO) which was intended to be fired from a bipod as a Squad Automatic Weapon (SAW). Detachable box magazines were located in front of the trigger guard where a thumb operated catch allowed them to be changed quickly. Twenty-round magazines were standard but a thirty-round magazine was offer for use with the FALO.

The fixed-stock version had the recoil spring housed in the stock, while the folding-stock version's spring was housed in the receiver cover, necessitating a slightly different receiver cover, recoil spring, and bolt carrier, and a modified lower receiver to provide clearance for the folding stock. Another optional feature was fixed or folding cocking handle.

The 7.62mm NATO Controversy

Saive originally conceived of the FAL as an “assault rifle” similar in concept to the WWII German Sturmgewehr 44 and his original models were in fact chambered for the Wehrmacht’s 7,9mm Pistolepatrone 43 (7.9x33) intermediate cartridge ... which led to immediate controversy.

In the post-war years, the British had developed a bullpup style assault rifle, the EM-2, firing an intermediate .280 caliber cartridge based upon a rimless, bottlenecked case 43mm long loaded with a 130 gr. FMJ Spitzer bullet at a velocity of 2,530 fps. Despite U.S. opposition to the concept of intermediate cartridges, the British tentatively adopted the EM-2 as the Rifle, Automatic, Calibre .280, No. 9.

At this time, NATO had decided it would be tactically beneficial if all the member armed forces used the same weapons chambered for a common cartridge. The British put forth their No. 9 rifle and .280 cartridge for consideration and FN, seeing the possibilities of the British .280 cartridge, had Saive redesign the FAL to fire it.

The British developed a bullpup style assault rifle, the EM-2, chambered for a .280 caliber intermediate cartridge.

U.S. Army Col. René Studler championed the .30 T65 cartridge (which became the 7.62mm NATO) and the Springfield Armory T44 rifle against the British EM-2 and FN-FAL, both chambered for the .280 British cartridge.

In the meantime, on this side of the Atlantic, Colonel René Studler, chief of the U.S. Small Arms Development Branch, was adamantly opposed to the concept of the intermediate cartridge and championed a full power, .30 caliber cartridge. Known as the T65, it was based upon a bottle necked, rimless case 51mm in length loaded with a 147 gr. FMJ Spitzer bullet at a velocity of 2,750 fps which just about duplicated the performance of the U.S. standard .30 M2 (.30-06).

Colonel Studler set the staff at Springfield Arsenal to design a rifle to fire the T65 cartridge which, he envisioned, would replace the M1 Garand, M1/M2 Carbine, Browning Automatic rifle and M3A1 sub-machine gun. The resulting rifle, known as the T44, combined a modified M1 Garand receiver with a 20 round detachable magazine and both semiauto and selective fire versions were produced.

In 1950, the British entered both their No. 9 and a .280 caliber FAL in the U.S. Army’s Light Rifle Trials where they competed against an early version of the T44 known as the T25 chambered for the T65. While many of the testing officers felt the .280 FAL as the best of the three, Col. Studler’s not unsubstantial influence led to the 7.62mm rifle being declared superior. As it could not be upsized to handle the T65, this was the death knell for the No. 9 and its .280 cartridge. One British officer said their efforts to promote them had been “Studlered.”⁵

FN had Saive redesign the FAL to handle the T65 cartridge and 1953 saw both United States and Great Britain both order a number from FN. In the U.S., the Belgian rifles were issued to the Army for field testing and were then entered in the U.S. Army’s 1953 trials as the “FN Lightweight Cal. 30 Rifle” where it competed against the above mentioned T44 rifle. Both rifles performed well enough that more tests were called for but the FAL failed to pass the Arctic Winter Tests held in Alaska.⁶

In an attempt to appear “fair,” in 1954, the Army had Harrington & Richardson manufacture five hundred T48 for comparison trials against the T44. But once again they found the T44 more to their liking and in 1957 it was adopted as the U.S. Rifle, Caliber 7.62mm, M14.

Before they were carved in stone, they were struck in SILVER.

JUST RELEASED: One of America's FIRST Civil War Silver Half Dollars.

Civil War collectibles are among today's most popular and sought after artifacts. But no Civil War collection can be complete without including one of the very FIRST-EVER Civil War commemorative coins struck by the United States Mint: The 1925 Stone Mountain Silver Half Dollar.

Both the coin and the Stone Mountain Memorial near Atlanta, Georgia feature Generals Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson on horseback. The Stone Mountain Memorial was designed by famed sculptor Gutzon Borglum, whose next masterpiece would be the magnificent Mount Rushmore.

Etched in History, Carved in Stone, Struck in Silver!

These 90% silver half dollars were minted in 1925 to raise money for the memorial. Over the years since they were minted, many were spent during the Great Depression, or melted down to obtain their precious silver. Today, they can be difficult to find.

Thanks to a remarkable recent discovery, however, GovMint.com has obtained a limited supply of these desirable Stone Mountain Silver Half Dollars. The detail and relief on these stunning coins make each one a work of art. It's no wonder they're in such high demand!

Historic Public Release

We are now releasing our entire supply of these historic and valuable coins to the public. Each is in lightly circulated condition and comes with an informative story card and a certificate of authenticity.

In 1953, the Allied Rifle Committee had recommended the FAL as the standard rifle for NATO members, along with designating the T65 cartridge as 7.62x51mm NATO. This committee also suggested several upgrades and improvements to the rifle, which some users would adopt, while others would not. FN was happy to customize the platform to suit individual militaries’ needs, as long as their requirements were feasible.

The first country to adopt the 7.62mm FAL was Canada. They had originally planned to take a .280 caliber FAL into service but with the American decision to adopt the T65 cartridge they placed an order with FN in 1954 for 2,000 FALs for troop trials. Two years later, the FAL was adopted as the Rifle, 7.62mm FN (C1) and a license was obtained from FN to manufacture it at Canadian Arsenals, Ltd. in Long Branch, Ontario.

“INCH” AND “METRIC”
PATTERN FALs

While FALs manufactured by FN — and those produced under license by other nations — used metric measurements, when the British adopted the SLR its dimensions were converted to imperial measurements. Most, but not all, parts are interchangeable between the “Inch” and “Metric” pattern rifles. For instance, the SLR can use either Inch or Metric magazines but Metric-patterns FALs cannot accept Inch-pattern magazines. The Canadian C1 and Australian-built L1A1 weapons are all Inch-pattern while components of the Indian 7,62mm Rifle 1A (see below) are not interchangeable with either Inch or Metric-pattern FALs. FN

A semi-auto-only rifle, the C1 was an Inch-Pattern rifle similar to the British L1A1 (see below) but differed in that it used a rotating disc rear sight graduated from 200 to 600 yards, a two-piece firing pin, the trigger guard could be folded forward to allow firing when wearing mittens and an open topped receiver cover with guides that allowed refilling the magazine with chargers (stripper clips) without removing it from the rifle.⁷ It, and the slightly modified C1A1, served as the standard Canadian rifle until 1984.

To provide their troops with a SAW, the Canadians adopted a selective-fire version of the heavy barreled FALO as the Rifle, 7.62mm FN (C2) — later C2A1 — which was sighted to 1,000 yards, featured a unique handguard with wooden sides that could be folded down to serve as a bipod and was issued with 30-round magazines.

Additional C1/C1A1 rifles were provided to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and several provincial police forces. A selective-fire version, the C1D/C1A1D was produced for the Royal Canadian Navy who wanted a weapon with more firepower for use by boarding and landing parties.

Belgium adopted their native son's rifle in 1956 in the standard, Para and FALO versions. That same year the West German Bundesgrenzschutz (Border Guards) purchased a variant of the FAL designated as the Gewehr 1 (G1). The post-WWII German army, the Bundeswehr, was searching for a new rifle to replace the American supplied M1 Garand and M1 Carbines then in use, and found the G1 much to their liking.

They requested a few changes including a ventilated, sheet metal handguard with an integral, light weight folding bipod. The Germans placed an order with FN for 100,000 G1s and attempted to negotiate a license to produce it in Germany ... which the Belgians refused. Reportedly the Belgians harbored enough resentment as a result of Germany's WWII occupation of the nation, and their destruction of the FN facilities, that they insisted if the Germans wanted the G1 they had to purchase FN-produced rifles.⁸

The West German army adopted the FAL as the Gewehr 1. Note the ventilated metal handguard and integral bipod.

The Germans issued a sniper version of the G1.

In the contest between Belgian stubbornness and German pride, pride won out. After the delivery of the initial order of G1s Germany adopted a version of the Spanish Modelo C CETME rifle, as improved by Heckler & Koch, as the Gewehr 3 in 1959 and sold off their G1s to Turkey and Portugal.⁹

The British army began testing the 7.62mm FAL in 1953, some of which were used during the Malaysian Emergency (see below), and obtained a license from FN to manufacture the rifle at the Royal Small Arms Factory (RSAF) at Enfield, Birmingham Small Arms and the ROF Fazakerley. Known in British service as the Self-Loading Rifle, 7.62mm, L1A1, they were first issued to troops in 1957.¹⁰ The L1A1 was a semiauto only rifle which followed the standard FN pattern with a solid top receiver cover and a sliding aperture rear sight which could be folded down when Britain sold, or provided as military aid, large numbers of L1A1 rifles to Nigeria, Malaysia, Brunei, Singapore, Jamaica, Rhodesia, and many of its former colonies and Commonwealth armies and the Republic of Ireland. Copies were manufactured at the Small Arms Factory at Lithgow, Australia for that nation's armed forces and were sold to New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Sri Lanka and Singapore. Limited numbers of copies, known as the NR-1, were produced in Nigeria by the Defense Industries Corporation of Nigeria. Between the late 1960s and 1998, Britain maintained large numbers of troops to Northern Ireland in an attempt to stem the sectarian violence between Protestant Unionists and the Catholic Nationalists. Both groups had long maintained unofficial armed militias and the trouble that had been simmering for decades exploded into outright urban warfare in the 1960s. It was during the urban fighting that

GREEK SMALL ARMS OF WORLD WAR II — PART III

ΜΟΛΩΝ ΛΑΒΕ¹

By Paul Scarlata Photos by Paul Budde, James Walters, Nathan Reynolds and as credited

On April 17, 1944, the Greek People's Liberation Army forces (ELAS) attacked a National and Social Liberation movement regiment (EKKA), capturing and executing the popular Colonel Psarros and many of his men. This action drove many liberals and moderates to the right, and cemented the rift between the two segments of the Greek population.

The Political Committee of National Liberation/Mountain Government (PEEA) found support among Greek armed forces in Egypt, many of whom were well-disposed towards National Liberation Front (EAM). A mutiny erupted in which the mutineers demanded that a Government of National Unity be established, based on PEEA principles. The mutiny was suppressed by British forces and Greek troops loyal to the exiled government.

By the summer of 1944, the Red Army was advancing into Rumania and towards Yugoslavia putting German forces in Greece at risk of being cut off. The Cairo Government, now led by George Papandreou relocated to Italy in preparation for their return to Greece. Under an agreement reached in September 1944, all resistance forces in Greece were placed under the command of a British officer, General Ronald Scobie.

Allied troops landed in Greece in October, although most of country had already been liberated by Greek partisans. On October 13th British troops entered Athens, and Papandreou and his ministers followed six days later. The King remained in Egypt because Papandreou had demanded that the future of the monarchy would be decided by national referendum.

At this point, there was little to prevent ELAS from taking full control of the country but the Communist Party of Greece (KKE) was under instructions from the USSR not to precipitate a crisis that could jeopardize Allied unity and put at risk Stalin's larger post-war objectives. But, while the KKE leadership knew this, ELAS fighters and rank-and-file Communists did not and it became a source of conflict within EAM and ELAS.

The British No. 1 Mark III* was the rifle that saw widest service with the Hellenic Army in the Middle East. (Courtesy Rock Island Auction Co.)

Weapons Used by the Hellenic Army in the Middle East

The Greek troops that had managed to make their way to Egypt were reorganized to British army standards and armed with British small arms including the ubiquitous No. 1 Mk. III* Lee-Enfield rifle. While the No. 1 was the primary rifle they were later supplemented with No. 4 Mk. 1 Lee-Enfields while training units were often equipped with Pattern 14 (P14) rifles.

Special operations units, such as the Sacred Band, favored the U.S. M1 Carbine for its light weight and high rate of fire.

Greeks were originally armed with Lewis guns but these were eventually replaced with the highly regarded Bren gun.

Submachine guns were also highly regarded especially for clandestine and hit and run operations and Greek resistance fighters were supplied with numbers of British Sten guns. After the U.S. entered the war the OSS began providing arms to the Greeks including Thompson and UD-42 submachine guns, although it appears that most of the latter were supplied to the resistance forces.

During the war, the Hellenic Army in the Middle East received numbers of .380 caliber revolvers from their British allies. Some of these remained in service well into the 1980s.

M1943 SPANISH MAIN BATTLE RIFLES

Good condition.
Only $200.00

FFL or C&R required

A finely crafted Spanish 8mm short rifle following the pattern of the original k98 German short rifle. The last rifle for Spain to be made in the old ways. Although, giving way to a new era these hardy and accurate rifles did their job superbly.

Manufactured from famously superior Spanish steel and certainly able to take a lickin' and keep on a tickin'.

Single ring. We have been fortunate to obtain a small supply of these replica swords, all fashioned in the Orient by master sword smiths. Weapons of the Greek Resistance Movements

The various Greek partisan forces used all of the weapons mentioned above in addition to large quantities of small arms captured from — or surrendered by — the Axis forces.

In 1940, the Greeks had captured large quantities of Italian small arms including Fucile di Fanteria and Moschetti (carbines) Modello 1891 and Fucile Modello 38. Additional Carcanos were captured by the partisans from Italian occupation forces and large numbers were turned over when the Italian forces surrendered in 1943. Smaller numbers of the Moschetto 38 — in 6,5mm — were also used. Because of this, the Carcano eventually became the primary long arm of Greek partisan forces and saw service with them until the end of the Civil War 1949.

From the German and Bulgarian occupation forces, the Greek partisans captured numbers of Mausers, including both the German Karabiner 98k and Czech-made Puska vz. 24.

Because of the hit and run nature of guerilla warfare, the submachine gun was a very practical — and popular — weapon. The pre-war Greek army had not adopted a submachine gun but in the late 1930s a number of Steyr-Solothurn MP34s had been obtained from the Steyr Werke for issue to the Greek security police (Asfaleias).

The Italian army issued limited numbers of sub-machine guns, primarily the excellent Moschetti Automatico Beretta Mo. 38A and Mo. 38/42, to their occupation forces in Greece. Numbers of these were captured by Greek partisans and saw service during the occupation and the ensuing civil war.

The next most common submachine that would have been encountered in Greek partisan service was the German MP40. The standard submachine gun of the Wehrmacht, the MP40 was a revolutionary design made primarily from stamped steel and plastic.

Waffen SS and German police units in Greece were issued a variety of submachine guns, one of the more common being the MP41 which was little more than the MP40 fitted with a wooden stock and a fire selector. Limited numbers were captured and used by Greek partisans.

Numerous machine guns were captured from Italian, German and Bulgarian occupation forces but due to the fluid nature of the fighting, the partisans found light machine guns to be most practical although some heavy machine guns were used to defend established positions.

From the Italians, the partisans captured one of the worst machine guns of the war — the Fucile Mitragliatori Breda Modello 1930. A blowback operated design, it required oiled cartridges to insure reliable operation and had a side mounted magazine housing that was folded forward and loaded with chargers. Despite its shortcomings, the Modello 30 saw widespread use by all partisan forces.

As German forces became more involved in anti-guerilla operations, Greek partisans captured numbers of machine guns from them, primarily the MG34 and MG42. Both are what today are referred to as “general purpose” machine guns meaning that they could be fired from a bipod as a light machine gun or from a tripod as a medium machine gun. Both were belt fed, air cooled weapons with high rates of fire and quick-change barrels. In addition, both the Germans and Bulgarians fielded the Czech-made ZB26 light machine gun.

Greek resistance fighters valued handguns and used large numbers of captured Beretta Modello 1934, Pistole 08 (Luger) and Pistole 38 (Walther) that they captured from the Germans and Italians.

The issue of disarming the resistance organizations was a cause of friction between the Papandreou government and the EAM. Advised by the British, Papandreou demanded the disarmament of all armed forces apart from the Sacred Band and the 3rd Mountain Brigade which constituted the new National Army under government control.

The KKE believing that this would leave ELAS defenseless against right-wing militias and the anti-communist Security Battalions submitted an alternative plan of total and simultaneous disarmament. Papandreou rejected it as he felt the Security Battalions were a good reserve against a possible communist coup, and on December 2nd, KKE ministers resigned from the government. In December, General Scobie issued a proclamation disbanding the ELAS which the KKE leadership refused to abide by.

The KKE organized a mass demonstration by 100,000 people in Athens which became violent. Fighting between rival factions and the army left dozens killed and 148 injured. This signaled the beginning of a month-long period of full-scale urban fighting in Athens between ELAS and the new government.

While the British attempted to stay neutral, they were forced to intervene. By December 12th ELAS was in control of most of Athens and Piraeus forcing the outnumbered British to bring in reinforcements. During the battle, some local militias fought alongside the British, triggering a massacre of suspected civilians by ELAS fighters.

By January 1945, British forces had driven ELAS units from Athens. That February the various Greek parties signed the Treaty of Varkiza which provided for the demobilization of ELAS and all other paramilitary groups, an amnesty for political offences, a referendum on the monarchy, and a general election as soon as possible. The KKE remained legal but ELAS's existence was terminated.

At the same time, the National Army and royalist militias continued their war against ex-members of ELAS. The authorities arrested approximately 40,000 communists and former-ELAS members which led to many partisans hiding their weapons in the mountains, while others escaped to Yugoslavia. The result would be that Greece was ravaged by a bloody civil war for the next four years.

THE MILITIA ASPECT, PART 2

By David Codrea

“Col. Ethan Allen, later of the Continental Army and Vermont Militia, may have originated guerrilla warfare in the 13 colonies,” a Military.com profile recalls. “When New York’s British governor Tryon attempted to appropriate the land known as the New Hampshire Grants for the crown, Allen organized his Green Mountain Boys to protect the settlers’ rights in the area.”

The great man, whose statue now stands in front of the Vermont Statehouse (at least until useful idiot social just warriors pull it down), and many of the local militias of the time, were outlaws. So, according to the Crown, were the Continental Army and the Congress that “authorized” it. So were “the people” behind it all, who supported the War of the Rebellion and took up arms against a tyrannical government.

There’s no denying it. Today’s citizen disarmament lobby would deem them “gun criminals.” Hell, Josh Horowitz of the Coalition to Stop Gun Violence (CSGV — formerly National Coalition to Ban Handguns) calls such behavior “treason and vigilantism,” that is, capital crimes.

The Real Criminals

“Political power,” Chairman Mao declared, “grows out of the barrel of a gun.” That’s something totalitarians know instinctively. That’s why they demand being the only ones wielding it.

“The concept of a ‘monopoly on force’ might sound foreign or even frightening to Americans that take great pride in our revolutionary beginnings,” CSGV’s Horwitz proselytized in a Huffington Post citizen disarmament advocacy piece, “but it is the fundamental organizing principle of any political entity, including the United States.”

To back up this assertion,” he cites, ‘German political economist and sociologist Max Weber. What he doesn’t cite is Weber’s support for approving Article 48 into the Weimar constitution, establishing “emergency powers” to bypass Reichstag consent, and allowing Adolf Hitler’s rise to unchallenged power. Not to mention the attainment of a “monopoly of force,” although Weber preferred the term “violence.”

“The Militia of the several states” mandated in the Constitution, provided the “fundamental organizing principle” that made the United States different and put to the lie Horwitz’s offensive assertion. The American Revolution was one of ideology. The Founders made it clear in the Declaration:

“That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, — That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness.”

Opposing the right to keep and bear arms, the most egalitarian power-sharing arrangement ever devised, is how you know a collectivist is lying and interested only in wielding unchecked force against subjects that are ultimately slaves.

Tyrants are the worst of criminals.

From Treason to ‘Supreme Law of the Land’

Having won political power through the barrel of a gun, the “traitors” to the Crown were now in charge, and they set out to preserve “the security of a free State.” The Second Amendment defines the one thing they deemed “necessary” to achieve it — “a well regulated Militia.”

The Militia Acts of 1792 elaborated on the right and the duty for citizen of “the respective States” to be organized and equipped:

“That every citizen, so enrolled and notified, shall, within six months thereafter, provide himself with a good musket or firelock, a sufficient bayonet and belt, two spare flints, and a knapsack, a pouch, with a box therein, to contain not less than twenty four cartridges, suited to the bore of his musket or firelock, each cartridge to contain a proper quantity of powder and ball; or with a good rifle, knapsack, shot-pouch, and powder-horn, twenty balls suited to the bore of his rifle, and a quarter of a pound of powder; and shall appear so armed, accoutred and provided, when called out to exercise or into service, except, that when called out on company days to exercise only, he may appear without a knapsack.”

Compare these expectations to those of modern-day handwringers decrying “ordinary people” having “weapons of war.” That’s just what the Founders expected the people to have, not just as a right, but as a duty.

Militia ‘R’ Us

In Part 1 Firearms News explored the Constitutional authorization for the Militia of the several States, noted that contrary to what some would have us believe it has not been “replaced” by the National Guard, reviewed current United States Code definitions, explored a bit of Founding sentiment and noted how the legal and political deterioration through neglect and intent serves the interests of those who would rule without restraints.

While the Constitution provides for the federal government to “govern...such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States,” that qualifier proved problematic for those who viewed the Militia as enforcers for whatever they wanted to do, as became apparent in the War of 1812, when “The governors of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island refused to order out Militia except for the defense of their respective States.”

Nullification was not a power that applied only to juries. It goes to the heart of refusal to obey orders deemed unlawful. James Madison, in Federalist No. 46, anticipated not just nullification on the part of the Militia, but outright resistance if warranted:

“Let a regular army, fully equal to the resources of the country, be formed; and let it be entirely at the devotion of the federal government; still it would not be going too far to say, that the State governments, with the people on their side, would be able to repel the danger.”

I wonder what Josh Horowitz would say about that. Or any of the Democrat presidential candidates, who ought to have Madison’s sobering words thrown in their teeth. They are understood completely by those who would relegate the Militia of the several States to an irrelevant footnote and dismiss the revitalization of same as a “Red Dawn” fantasy to ridicule.

That’s why it’s on us to recognize the fraud that’s been perpetrated to swindle Americans out of their birthright, as embodied in the (aptly named, it would seem) “Dick Act,” which presented itself as “AN ACT to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes.”

As with the National Guard, state guards, promoted by the State Guard Association of the United States, are select militias, something the Founders considered with the same distrust as a standing army. And while it looked like former Col. Senator Gary Hart (yes, the one whose career was effectively destroyed in a sex scandal) showed a historical understanding in his The Minuteman: Restoring an Army of the People, the “citizen soldiers” he envisioned “would expand National Guard reserves.”

That’s still a far cry from the so-called “unorganized militia” of United States Code, which, according to lawyer and Constitutional scholar Dr. Edwin Vieira, is in itself an example of Congressional “malfeasance... beyond the pale.”

“Under no circumstances may Congress leave the Militia unorganized, unarmed, or undisciplined — let alone knowingly and intentionally impose such conditions,” Vieira instructs. The very term is “an oxymoron,” he shows.

Vieira’s website archives (<http://edwinvieira.com/>) include his eight-part The Militia of the Several States; Guarantee the Right to Keep and Bear Arms, as well as numerous other important topics of principle and law. Additionally, his indispensable “Thirteen Words” demonstrates how gun advocates ignoring the Second Amendment’s prefatory clause effectively guarantee infringements. We cannot effectively defend, promote or advance the Second Amendment — legislatively or through the courts — by ignoring Founding intent. And so far, the “famous names” and the rice bowl groups in the RKBA movement have relegated largely unrecognized authorities like Vieira, and “lawyer, philosopher & logician” Joanna Martin, J.D., writing as “Publius Huldah,” to the role of Cassandra’s, whose warnings, if heard at all, fall mostly on obliviously — or intentionally — deaf ears.

Sic Semper Tyrannis

Gun owner eyes are on Virginia, where a Democrat sweep of a once “Republican state” is drawing opposing sides closer to a forceful conflict than we’ve seen in this country in our lifetimes. Ever hungry for power and to compel those they deplore to obey, the Democrats, emboldened by a recent population majority that reflects manipulated demographics, can scarcely contain itself ramming increasingly odious citizen disarmament measures down the throats of outnumbered heritage Virginians. They, in turn, still occupy most of the land mass and won’t give up their guns.

Recalling the militia formed in Fairfax County by Founding Father George Mason in 1774 (note the similarity to Ethan Allen’s), we now see not only over 100 counties and towns to date passing “Second Amendment Sanctuary” resolutions, but have seen one local government (so far) go a step further and enact “A Resolution Promoting the Order of Militia within Tazewell County.”

Incapable of masking their inner totalitarians for long, Virginia Democrats declare such resolutions to be without force of law. Those who really can’t control themselves are threatening to call up the National Guard to enforce citizen disarmament. Talk about a prospective flashpoint with potential to spread, especially with gun owners in other states and counties templating off what’s happening in Virginia.

Can We All Get Along?

The answer to “motorist” Rodney King’s plea seems unlikely in an increasingly polarized country, where terms like “Boogaloo” are getting new meaning, and as talk becomes increasingly more hostile. Who doubts a state of cold civil war already exists between factions with irreconcilable differences? The fact is, we know what will be necessary to effect “the security of a free State,” but we also know the powers that be have no interest in putting on Constitutional chains when their whole shtick involves putting chains on others.

Depending on what happens next November, we’re likely to see more ripping asunder of the national fabric. If the Democrats gain power, expect to see more punitive, in-your-face infringements and more gun owners forming defiance alliances. If the Republicans win big, expect Trump Derangement Syndrome writ large, along with continued deliberate indifference among “moderates,” willing to pay lip service to RKBA if it serves their interests, but not actually willing to substantively advance the Second Amendment, and certainly not to champion its first thirteen words.

That’s what it’s going to take if we’re going to end the tyrannical foolishness once and for all.

BLACK CANVAS DUFFLE SHOULDER BAGS

LOWEST PRICE EVER !!!

COLT M16A1 VIETNAM ERA GI PARTS KITS.

ORIGINAL COLT PARTS FROM WAR SERVICE GUNS

Finally obtained a limited batch of Original Colt M16A1 Part Sets. Sight assembly and barrel parts were carefully stripped as barrels are prohibited from import by ATF regulations. All parts are original Colt mfg. Parts are generally in good shape, but show wear and blemishes from 50 years of storage & usage. All parts included except barrel, barrel extension, lower receiver, auto sear and magazine. Upper receiver and bolt carriers are assembled. This is like being thrown back in time to the Vietnam era. Gotta move quickly on these as we have only so many left. We have just acquired our last buy on these...and gone will be gone.

Original Colt M16A1 parts kit made in the 1980's. Each kit features the triangular handguard, the teardrop forward assist and original bolt carrier group. All bolt carriers will have the "C" for Colt stamped on the bolt carrier groups. Each kit comes with all parts. All you need to complete your rifle build is a barrel and a stripped lower receiver. This is the only chance to get original vintage Colt kits. Condition is good. Barrel, and Lower Receiver - not included. Front sight assembly is in kit.

A GRADE KIT - Stock in servicable condition. You may choose your triangular handguard set: Either a fair to good condition (that comes with the kit - may have cracks or missing teeth) OR you may have a brand new production copy of the original triangular handguards (please specify when ordering)

SPANISH CETME MODEL (C) RIFLE PARTS SET

308 SUPER SALE !! BEST PRICE EVER !!

Collaboration between German engineers and Franco's Spanish designers drove Spain to adopt the (C) version of the CETME rifle in 1974. Regarded as the lightweight option, the C rifle was adopted by the Spanish Army, Navy, and Air Force and chambered for the .308 Nato round. The German G-3 and the CETME are close cousins and share many of the same parts. In fact, 25 parts from the CETME and G-3 / HK91, are interchangeable with one another. Another 3 parts from the Trigger pack are also interchangeable as long as they are used as a set. The quality of the parts in this kit are remarkably excellent and outer parts are present with most of their original Parkerizing!

Our parts set includes all parts shown in the pictured parts breakdown above including the trunion and other necessary receiver parts for your semi auto build. We have barrels & 20rd magazines available separately. Additionally we will have receivers available very soon. The kit's real visual strength is the wooden stock and forend which accentuate the rifle's appearance and makes it look sporty and more appealing than the plastic furniture of the G-3. These kits are outstanding and we have not had this kind of quality in bulk kits since we had our Argentine FAL kits!

BREN MK3 LMG PARTS SET

No sales to Washington state.

Regarded as the lightest of the Bren Guns, the MK3 had lightening cuts made to the receiver and usually was found with a barrel @2-3/4 inches shorter than the MK1 series barrel. Nevertheless, both sized barrels were used on this gun in WW2. This model was envisaged as an answer for Airborne and Infantry troops fighting in the jungles of the Pacific, but actually once production started in 1943, it found its way to every theater of the war.

Our kit comes with all parts shown including the correct receiver cut to BATF specifications, a very good condition barrel and 5 - .303 cal. magazines..... 1 Month Sale !!!!! $285.00 $385.00 BREN121

PLEASE NOTE: These kits normally come with 30rd magazines. If you live in a state or municipality with laws against magazines of this capacity, the mag will be removed. Kits WITHOUT magazines have a $5 discount. If you are not sure if there are restrictions in your state, please check your local laws. We check before shipping out Hi-Cap magazines. L4A3 Kit with barrel..... 1 Month Sale !!!!! $595.00 $695.00 BREN134

After over 50 years of searching for these on the international market, we've finally obtained the classic .308 Bren as used from the 1950s through the 1990s! Last major use was in the Falklands War, but they are still blasting away in the Congo, Sudan, and other hot spots. Predecessor to the MAG-58, the Bren .308 LMGs evolved in many versions, whether converted from existing Bren models or made completely new, these guns were a formidable improvement on the .303 models. Stalwart enough for use in the Falkland operation where British 2 Para, employed them along side the MAG-58. The magazines were ideally made to interchange with the the L1A1 service rifle of the time. Sarco has obtained the Model L4A3 Bren Light Machine Gun and had the receivers cut to BATF specifications. All parts except barrel are included with the kit including the 4 pieces of Demil. Rec., and we include 1 - 30 rd. .308 magazine! The quality of the kit is generally in very good condition. This would make a fabulous 'semi' build, or display gun. Get one while you can because they are quite limited!..... 1 Month Sale !!!!! $495.00 $595.00 BREN122

'BLACK LEGION' OF THE BIAFRAN WAR

JUST IN!

Mercenary Shoulder Badge of the Biafran War (1967-70), as designed by renowned Commander, Rolf Steiner, who had a fabled career and was the muse for Frederick Forsyth's protagonist in the novel 'The Dogs of War'. One of the true Adventurer's and a seasoned commander who served in the French Foreign Legion in Indochina, Algeria, Sudan, & Egypt, as well as commander of the Biafran 4th Commando Brigade in the Nigerian Civil War. New

U.S. PINEAPPLE GRENADE

Inert cast iron body with inert USGI fuse lends authenticity to this iconic staple of the American serviceman in the last century. Introduced in WW1, the original designed grenade progressed through evolu tions to serve in WW2, Korea, and beyond to retirement @1969. A very deadly grenade due to its girth and cas tellated body which reminded GIs of a Pineapple. Comes with WW2 era, (1943) 'overpaint Yellow' band and O.D. green body

M65 DRAEGER
NATO GAS MASK

Quality, unissued German Bundeswehr gas mask with filter. Comes with hard case in either black or gray and features a Nato standard 40mm thread, sealed filter. Sold as collectible only. Current Nato 40mm filters are available on the market with all sorts of protective properties. Filter supplied, is a standard unissued & sealed filter. Unit comes with instructions. Bargain priced at a fraction of it's manufactured cost!.....

FRONT SIGHT RAMPS FOR SPORTING RIFLES

Deep from the recesses of our Ware-house, we have un-covered 'new' front sight ramps for installing on your bar-rel. Ramp is steel, @3.3 inches long, .41 inches wide, .47 inches high, with a blued finish. Accepts front sights with a 'dovetailed' base at @60 degrees. Two screw holes spaced 1.9 inches apart and inset grooves on either side for installing a sight hood if desired.

VIETNAM HIGHLAND ERTL
CAMOUFLAGE SHIRTS

We found @100 rip stop pattern Vietnam ERTL Highland Camouflage shirts which have been gone from the market for more than a decade. Only able to obtain Small and Medium shirts. These shirts are used, may have had rips/sewing repairs made, some have various insignia and come from U.S. Army and the U.S. Marines. Most have straight pockets, very small number with diagonal pockets

TROOPER SWORD

French patterned sword applied to U.S. Cavalry and Plains Indian War use, and reminiscent of the 1860 pattern Saber, this steel 32.5" blade has a classic wire bound leather grip with brass segregated/fluted guard and steel scabbard with mounting rings

LRAC ROCKET (INERT)

We have inert synthetic display LRAC Rockets! An almost impos-sible rocket to find anywhere on the market. SALE !!

MLE-49 FRENCH INDOCHINA & ALGERIA BUSH HAT

Mle-49 'Le Chapeau de Brousse' Famous and very hard to find, French 'bush hat' as used by the French Foreign Legion during their conflicts in Vietnam and Algerian theaters of operation. We have a small number of new manufactured Mle-49 hats in the almost impossible to find size of U.S. size 7-1/2" (Large)!!! We also have some in 7-1/4", 7-5/8". There are faithfully made in a heavy khaki cotton with traditional batting in the brim (not cardboard!). Please specify size: 7-1/4", 7-1/2" (Large), 7-5/8"

MEDIEVAL CAULDRON

We just had to have a batch of these as they really look like an interesting antiquity with the rugged riveted construction and contours. Weighs just over 5 pounds and holds up to 8 liters or just over 8 quarts. Bound to get comments on how cool it looks and it should feed a squad of Boy Scouts or half dozen of your hunting buddies at the camp site! Steel cauldron with Kalai tin lining for food preparation.....

Perfect For Cool Weather !

'SAVOY 7' COMBAT JUMPSUIT, GRASS PATTERN CAMOUFLAGE

We have managed to obtain some of the current operational one piece 'Jumper' suits used in Equato-rial Africa by a security NGO. The 'Jumpsuit' is comfortable, roomy, and has 'ZIP OFF' detachable sleeves and leg sections like many 'Trekking pants'. Capacious pockets adorn the uniform as there are two M16 maga-zine pockets, one on each calf, two front thigh pockets, 2 large hip pockets and breast pockets including one on each arm. Two zippers on front, and two belt bands for waist adjustment. While these suits are utilized by Aircrew, Vehicle operators, and Strike teams, they lend themselves to any work activity and perfect for the Ranch or Garage! Comfort in almost any weather! Very limited sizes. Get 'em while they last! Cotton/Poly, new (unissued). Avail-able in Large, XL, 2-XL

MAN PUP TENT'

New production for Cameroon crisis Govt. contract of rugged canvas two section, two man, capacity tents for field op-erations in a little known rebellion in Africa. Made to order, these tents come with 2 sets of 3 pole sections, 8 pegs, and two cords. Made so two soldiers can carry 1/2 tent each and in durable anvas, non synthetic material for extended use. Grass pattern camouflage blends beautifully in northern deciduous forests or equatorial regions. Very similar to the U.S. pup tent design, it distributes 'carry weight' effectively and affords ease of assembly. Very limited. New, unissued SALE!

U.S. 1860 LIGHT CAVALRY
SABER

With over 300,000 manufactured during the U.S. Civil War, this may have been the most commonly used sword of the war. Wielded by George Custer, J.E.B Stuart and others, this sword served the military up into the Spanish American War. Beautiful reproduction in steel & brass with a blade of 32.5 inches and overall length of 38.75 inches. Comes with steel scabbard

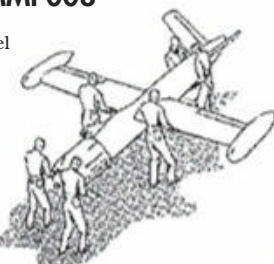

U.S. GUANTANAMO BAY MINE
FIELD SIGN

Before the 'Jihadists' landed at GTMO, there was the issue with Castro. Two in depth minefields surrounded the base and had to be maintained at the cost of human life on occasion. The 30 year old U.S. minefield is now gone and we can offer the steel signs that dotted the perimeter with warning of danger. These metal signs are imprinted with both Spanish and English warnings.....

$105.00 REP27

NOTE ON NON-FIRING DISPLAY GUNS

While most Americans can own non-firing display guns, some States and municipalities have enacted regulations inhibiting ownership. It is important that you check your State's gun laws to see if you reside in one of these areas. We cannot ship our display guns out of the country. Below is a partial list of States where there are laws concerning ownership of display guns. Remember, by ordering from Sarco, Inc., you are confirming to us that you are complying with your State regulations on this issue. CA, CT, KS, MA, MN, WI *All non-firing display guns come with an orange plug inserted in the muzzle - required by Commerce law.

SPECIALTY SPANNER
NUT DRIVER FOR OLD
MILITARY FASTENERS

British and other European military manufacturers utilized round nuts which allowed screws to pass through and could only be removed with a 'spanner' type driver. Usually on Bayonets and some gun fasteners. We have a small number of early 20th century tools for removing the spanner type nuts. These metal tools are meant to be inserted into a wood handle. We are selling the tool without the wood handle. Some of the tools may slightly differ from the picture due to early manufacturing methods. Distance spanned between teeth is about 6mm+. 2 tools in a Pack..... $7.00 MISC876

GERMAN PANZERFAUST 60M LAUNCHER & ROCKET (INERT /NON-FIRING)

All steel construction, this full size WWII German Panzerfaust Rocket Launcher was the precursor for the RPG series. It packed a terrible punch and gained respect by Allied tank crews who faced this on many campaigns, especially when driving through small German towns where it was the easiest way to close down a road. Our Panzerfaust comes complete with a reprint of the original WWII operator instructions, flip up sight/trigger unit, and rocket with flexible fins. A terrific display piece for museums, static displays or reenacting

ABOUT HIGH CAPACITY MAGAZINES:

Although we try to stay abreast of current State gun laws, it is a herculean task with over 20,000 laws on the books. By ordering, you are stating that you are complying with your Local & State laws. Most States allow large capacity magazines. Some do not. If you are unsure on this issue, contact your Local or State law enforcement to confirm what is allowed. This is a partial list of States with some hi-capacity restrictions: NJ, NY, MA, MD, HI, KS, CO, CT, IL and various county laws therein including Chicago, D.C. CA residents - check your laws as they are changing.

CHARTER ARMS 'ROSEWOOD' PROJECT GRIPS

Our latest find !!! We have just found a pile of fully 'inletted' & shaped grips in 'project phase', meaning that they are formed from one piece of wood and shaped & contoured for final sanding and fitting. These are for the Charter Bulldog Revolver, but can be finished for all sorts of revolver projects. When 'Cholly' shot on the pistol team in the Marine Corps, he took a starter set of grips like this and shaped a pair of grips for his S&W K 38 Masterpiece revolver so that they would perfectly form to his hand. This is a terrific chance to obtain Rosewood grips that you can custom fit to your own hand & firearm! $14.95 GRP215

PROJECT BARRELS FOR THE RUGER® 10/22®

Sarco brings you a terrific selection of new barrels for your Ruger® 10/22® firearms project. We offer 4 caliber selections. In some cases, these barrels just need to be polished and crowned on the muzzle end. A few will need other finishing touches. Compare at $99.00. See notes below:
1. .17 caliber HM2 SS, 18 inches long 920 O.D. Ready to Go! $65.00 RGR007
2. .22 caliber Magnum, 4140, 24.5 inches long 920 O.D. needs to be polished and crowned..... $39.95 ~~$50.00~~ RGR003
3. .17 caliber HMR SS, 18.25 inches long 920 O.D. needs to be polished and crowned $39.95 ~~$50.00~~ RGR006
PLEASE NOTE: .17 HMR is for 10/22 Magnum rifles only! This is not a recommended conversion as you would need a heavy bolt and heavy recoil spring. Chamber pressure is too great and is problematic in semi autos. This is only for the advanced gun builder and when assembled, should be carefully checked by a qualified gunsmith.
.17 HM2 REQUIRES USE OF A HEAVY BOLT.
.22 MAGNUM- REPLACEMENT FOR ORIGINAL GUNS ONLY. WILL NOT FIT THE 10/22 LONG RIFLE

MG34/M42 FOR MG42 , MG3, & H&K21 MACHINE GUNS

Sarco has new in the wrap, original military issue, DM-1, 250 rd. length metal non-disintegrating belts. Sarco got a great deal and can pass the savings onto you! This is a favorite size because many customers cut the belts down to create multiple belt sizes that are best for them, their range use, and carrying capacity. Strong, easy to load and unload, these belts will last a long time with minimum care! These belts were previously $49.95! Now only.....

COMPLETE MAUSER ACTION, FULLY MACHINED & FORGED,

LARGE RING EUROPEAN COMMERCIAL ACTIONS MANUFACTURED

BY THE FAMED FIREARMS MAKER DUMOULIN OF 'BELGIUM'

ALMOST SOLD OUT - WE STARTED WITH 3,300 ACTIONS - NOW IS THE TIME TO GET

ONE OF THESE FABULOUS SQUARE BRIDGE ACTIONS !!!

AFTER DECADES THERE IS FINALLY A SQUARE BRIDGE MAUSER AVAILABLE FOR YOU!

ONCE AGAIN AVAILABLE AT SARCO...

AFTER 50+ YEARS!!

A fully forged & machined '98 Mauser SQUARE BRIDGE Receiver Action!

Sarco was fortunate in obtaining the last of the Dumoulin '98 Mauser actions produced in Belgium many years ago. This is the end for us - Originally had 3,300 actions. They have been a tremendous hit! These actions would be $600 elsewhere.

A square bridge Mauser has flat platforms machined into the receiver for the mounting of telescope platforms. This was the height of Mauser sporting rifle prodduction in the 1930's.

WE STRUCK A SPECIAL DEAL WITH ER SHAW WHO WILL MAKE BARRELS FOR THIS PROJECT.

Building your own Sniper, Target, or Varmint rifle has never been so enticing! Sarco worked for over a year to bring you this colossal opportunity to own a brand new, complete Dumoulin Mauser action at the best price on the world market!!!! Let's get to the objective specs:

RECEIVER: This is an A 2 steel, forged / heat treated body which has been checked and gauged after each machining operation ensuring precision with strict tolerances and ultimately, superb mating with attached parts and adherence to Engineer drawings.

BOLT: A 2 Steel, one piece bolt ,handle & knob with checkered flat on underside. The extractor is the traditional proven, 'claw type' extractor. Bolt Head diameter is set for the .30 06 family of cartridges.
(A2 Chromium/molybdenum/vanadium is tool steel).

RECEIVER SPECIAL FEATURES: Flats with threaded holes and dovetails, permit the use of a variety of rings and bases. This feature eliminates the need for screwed on bases. Each flat is predrilled and threaded for standard 6 48 screws in 2 places. Flat tops are parallel and at the same level. These Actions have been engineered from original FN Belgian blue prints.

TRIGGER MECHANISM: The trigger is fully adjustable for sear engagement, over travel, and creep. The trigger body is made of steel.

TRIGGER GUARD: This trigger guard is fully machined from a steel forging and has a hinged FN/ Ruger style floorplate and latch. Believe it or not, I priced a similar trigger guard at the Shotshow from a German supplier and they wanted $800 for the guard. The Action capacity is 5 rds. of .30 06 length ammo.

FINISH: These Actions and Guards are blued. Some have bright bolts.

RECEIVER THREADS: Threads are standard 1.10 x 12 TPI.

BOLT-SPECIAL FEATURES: Strength of the forged bolt exceeds that of bolts in normal production. The specially designed bolt sleeve is an FN type and incorporates a Winchester style side swing 3 position blocking safety. This type of safety allows the use of a single or double set trigger in complete safety and preventing a discharge. Currently a similar bolt sleeve sells for $150.00 $250.00 separately.

ORIGINAL U.S.G.I. 1903A3 SPRINGFIELD

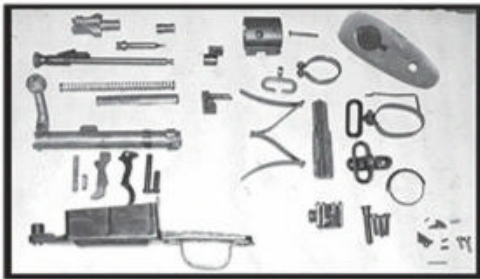

PROJECT NOW AVAILABLE TO YOU FROM SARCO!!!

This project is from 1903A3 Springfield Rifles that Sarco bought from the CMP. We have built 1,000s of these into guns, but just don't have the time at the moment. Now you have a chance to create your own G.I. A3 Springfield Rifle. Here is the deal..... we will supply a 1903A3 original G.I. barreled receiver from the auction guns. It will have the barrel tack welded to the receiver & the cutoff welded to the receiver. We will supply a brand new barrel for the project. Either original G.I. or current production, as per your selection below. The metal parts will be new or 'as new' original G.I. or a few exact late production parts. The Stock & Handguard will be a brand new full pistol grip C Stock. A replacement cutoff assembly will be supplied. You will have all the parts for this project. Note: talent is required for this technical operation. Sold as is & no returns. Pictures are accurate.

2 OPTIONS AVAILABLE:

- A. Complete project with original new G.I. barrel (worth $200.) in the G.I. wrapper $595.00 GUN827
B. Complete project with late production barrel, new $495.00 GUN828

Note: 1903A3 Springfields are selling for as much as $1,200!!! This is a limited offer until we get our production going again.

IMAGINATION IS NOW THE

MOTHER OF INVENTION!

*What could you build with a 93'

Mauser Action ?*

Our '93 Mauser actions have been sleeping for years. They came to life in the move to Pennsylvania. We have been going to do a "camp gun" and never got to do it. Time! Time! Time! Too many deals. Now you can have the fun of doing your own project. A short barrel lightweight small action makes the perfect companion. This action is relatively similar in size to the classic renowned G-33/40 Mauser Mountain Carbine action. Complete Mauser action $99.95 each, or 10 for $895.00 GUN653

If you already have parts or went to hunt your own we will sell you a receiver only for $19.95, 5 for $90.00, 10 for $160.00, 50 for $750.00 GUN594
Note: When building any gun, seek advice of a competent gunsmith or expert, especially in experimental projects. NOTE: THIS ACTION IS COMPLETE.
Others sell an incomplete busted gun for more – Our parts are also checked!

NEAT ENFIELD PROJECT!!!

Enfield #1 MK3 in .308 (7.62x51 Nato). Build your own collectors gun!! These are designated the Enfield 2A in this caliber. Building the 2A assures you of a caliber with cheaper ammunition costs over the standard .303 Enfield. We're selling 'em cheap enough so you can build a collector's gun as you hunt for the parts. Only $69.95 each GUN739 (that's half the value of a barrel!) * Always have a gunsmith check your work on any firearm project.

Sarco has a new shipment of what is perhaps the best Shotgun deal on the market. Cholly made a tremendous deal in bulk and we can pass the savings on to you! A 12-gage semi-auto that pumps 5 continuous blasts in seconds and ensures that targets fall in rapid succession. Meticulously made with 4140 steel CNC dual action bars, honed & chromed 20" barrel like the finest available, and even comes with interchangeable cylinder bore and tactical chokes! No sloppy milling marks either.... This product is quality controlled through tightly enhanced CNC milling and quality control certification. Numerous firearm reviewers love this shotgun and the features of the buffered full stock and large 2 position cross safety and long forend extending your grip range. Sling swivel posts are in place and the entire shotgun has a black finish and weighs in at a convenient 8 lbs. w/ overall length of 37.5". 3 inch chamber circulates ammo beautifully with 3.25 and 3.5 dram powder loads. With good quality ammo, you'll be amazed at just how quickly you can send 5 slugs or buckshot downrange on target. With all of these features, you can't beat this shotgun for value and dependability. Perfect for the Hunt or Security at the front gate! Compare our price to the competition and check our YouTube for reviews!

TESTIMONIALS:

“Got Him On October 28th of 2018. My M76 is in the background protected by my flannel leaning against a tree. 1-Shot, iron sights, and a fantastic firearm. Thanks again AWO!” — Stephen Gregory
(Provided picture to the right)

“Finally got a chance to take my M76 to my club’s long distance range and had no problem ringing steel at 800 yards. With PPU ball ammo, the rifle was shooting 1.5 MOA with a cool barrel. With match hand loads, right at 1 MOA. For a combloc DMR this is phenomenal accuracy, so I thank you again for this awesome build.” — Jacob

GEISSELE® AUTOMATICS

Quality Triggers for the Warfighter and Competitor

This Month's Featured Trigger!

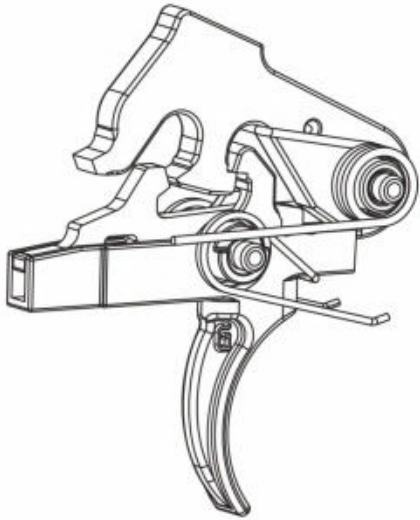

SSF®

The Geissele Super Select-Fire (SSF) trigger select-fire combat is a trigger that Geissele Automatics has developed for the U.S. Special Operations community. In semi-automatic mode, the SSF performs like a match-grade, two-stage trigger that allows precise and accurate trigger control. In fully-automatic mode, the SSF performs like a precision single-stage trigger with a smooth trigger pull and a crisp hammer release.

Go ahead and look for an optic more innovative than the

MEPRO FORESIGHT™

We'll wait.

- Over 20 different reticles.
- 000° Digital Compass
- Sight Leveler
- Bluetooth Connection
- Shot Counter
(Upcoming software upgrade)

Automatic Digital Zeroing
using Double Shoot™ App

Frequent firmware and features update.

YOU WON'T FIND ANOTHER RED DOT OPTIC LIKE THIS ONE.

Store up to ten zeroing profiles for ten different guns, regardless of caliber. That means you'll save time and ammo not having to re-zero when you swap the sight from one gun to the next. It's the only optic you will ever need!
